$28,000 TO PATRONS

Red Lake Falls Creamery Has Had a Most Prosperous Year.

The annual meeting of the Red Lake Falls Creamery association was held Tuesday, and officers for the ensuing year elected as follows:

Vice-president—George G. Orr.
Secretary—Noel Delorme.
Treasurer—Theo. Majeres.
Directors—George Walker, Delphis Patnode, Fred Behn, Michael Kees and Jeff Porter.

The business of the year has been very satisfactory, and the books show that $28,143.66 has been paid for milk. The average price paid for butterfat was 29 cents, an unusually high figure.

The creamery has been of incalculable benefit to the patrons, and in many instances has meant a prosperity that could not otherwise have been attained. The management is to be congratulated upon the excellent showing made.

THE AGE OF SHEEP

Agricultural Department Gives Farmers Advice as to How to Tell.

The following circular letter regarding the age of sheep is sent out by the Minnesota Farmers Institutes:

Ages Sheep are Good: Fine wool sheep live longer than medium or coarse wool sheep. The former have been used successfully as breeders from 1 to 8 years, and the latter from 1 to 6 and more rarely 7 years. This indicates the extreme period of usefulness in the flock. The prime of life probably extends from 1 to 5 or 6 years.

The Lamb: Has a short and small head as opposed to the head of the mature sheep. Its teeth are smaller in every way. They are usually smooth and white as opposed to a more corrugated darkened surface in the old sheep. The age of sheep is told by the four pair of incisors which are found only on the front lower jaw. These are all present by the time the lamb is six weeks old.

The Yearling: The central pair of small incisor teeth are replaced with a large pair when the lamb is ten to fourteen months old. They are almost twice as wide and much longer than those at either side.

Three Year Old: Gets a third pair of large teeth when about three years old. It would then have three pairs of large teeth and one pair of small or lamb teeth.

The Four Year Old: Has a full mouth of four pairs of large teeth. The outer ones are never as large as those in the center.

Five Years Old and Over: After the sheep is four years old it is difficult to tell the exact age. With age the teeth usually grow longer and narrower. They begin at six years to resemble sheep pegs. Sheep that are pasturing on short pasturage and get sand with their grass wear their short teeth even in old age. This is unusual in Minnesota. When sheep get long, peg like or broken teeth, it is time to dispose of them.

John Richards returned to his work as "school ma'am" at Anton Monday after spending several days at his home in this city.

SHOULD PREPARE FOR FAIR EXHIBIT

Could Prepare an Exhibit That Would Make People Think About This County.

Recently it was suggested to the Gazette that preparations should be made this winter for an exhibit at the next Minnesota state fair. It is an excellent suggestion and should be acted upon even though it is impossible to determine what crops will yield well next season.

Last summer the commissioners appropriated a liberal sum to defray the expenses of making an exhibit at the state fair, but the time was so limited that it was believed that a creditable showing could not be made. There is no doubt that if some plan of organization were adopted that much could be done before the crops are harvested in arranging for the exhibits. If there were committees in various parts of the county to urge people to make an effort to raise some products of more than ordinary quality, the result would be most satisfactory. The selection and preparation of seed and care of the growing things with the purpose of getting the best that is possible for the exhibit would accomplish much.

Roseau county they seems to have the right idea. There they have already organized and have started a campaign to make Roseau county's exhibit a "bumper." Lets all get busy and northern Minnesota will do some advertising stunts at the next state fair that will cause the southern Minnesota and Iowa and Illinois farmers to sit up and ponder.

The suggestion that Red Lake county people get busy this winter was made by a Red Lake county farmer. He said that if certain pieces of land were selected and treated for getting big results from the cultivation of certain grains or other products, care being taken in the selection and preparing of seed that the result would be remarkable. There is no doubt that he is right and the undertaking is worthy a big effort.

All Together, Now!

Now that the supreme court has decided the court house question, why not—in the words of the immortal Grover—"rally to the support of the general government" and enjoy some of that harmony we hear so much about in connection with the coming state campaign? Here's "hoi!" to Red Lake Falls.—St. Hilaire Spectator.

MAKING SURVEY

Engineers are Working on the Red Lake River.

Engineers in the employ of the United States government have been here this week making a survey of the Red Lake river. The flow of the water at the outlet of the Red Lakes has been determined and they are now going over the river to ascertain if it will be possible and practical to construct a dam at the outlet of the lakes and other works to regulate the flow of water and prevent the annual spring floods that do so much damage to the country along the Red River of the North.

SOMEBODY PINCH 'EM

Thief River Falls People Still Dreaming About a Court House.

The Thief River Falls people apparently have not awakened from the dream that their city will some day be the county seat of Red Lake county. They have petitioned for a rehearing of the case recently decided by the supreme court and that disposed finally of the injunction proceedings begun in an effort to restrain the county commissioners from issuing bonds for the erection of a court house.

In rendering the decision the only question before the supreme court was the interpretation of the statute under the authority of which the commissioners proposed to issue the bonds. There was no contention as to the facts in the case. Asking a court to question its own ability to interpret a statute is something like butting one's head against a stone wall.

HE LOVES OUR GIRLS

North Dakota [illegible] Smitten With Charms of Several Maidens.

A physician from a North Dakota town was in the city the first of the week on a very romantic mission. The poor man had been hard hit by a dart sent on its mission by the unerring aim of the little God who does most unusual stunts in the winter time because it is so beastly cold being on the job in such scanty attire and the matrimonial market is slow. The little fellow gets desperate at this season because it is so long until spring when a young man's thoughts flow in the right ditch without much pursuation.

Well, anyhow, the doctor man was hard hit. He confessed that Dan Cupid has him on the run and it was all accomplished in an unusual manner. The poor man saw a picture of a group of Red Lake Falls young ladies and he was smitten, smitten several times, for the fair maidens had severally and collectively inspired tender feelings. He simply had to come to Red Lake Falls to meet his fate—and the young ladies. The doctor is a man of determination and he was not ashamed to let the purpose of his visit be known. He has returned to his home, still controlled by conflicting emotions. He loves one girl just awfully—but which girl? Poor doc. Here's hoping love will find a way.

May Send a Delegate.

Owing to the revelations at St. Paul in connection with the management of the state agricultural society and the general shake-up which is forecasted to occur when the society holds its annual meeting in the capitol building on January 11th, for the first time in many years the various counties of the state may be asked to send delegates to the meeting.

Under the statute each county is entitled to representation and where no fair association exists the commissioners are empowered to appoint a delegate to represent the county.

The annual meeting of the society gives promise of being unusually interesting and if the various counties do send delegates down, it will mean a shake-up that will be felt from one end of the state to the other.—Detroit Record.

IS IT STEPHENS, KELLOGG OR CLAPP?

Many Candidates For Clapp's Place in United States Senate.

Will Be Plenty of Candidates When the Time Is Ripe.

[Special Correspondence to Red Lake Falls Gazette.]

St. Paul, Jan. 4.—Senator Stephens of Crookston is said to entertain the ambition to represent the state of Minnesota in the position now occupied by Senator Clapp. While not advertising this, the Polk county statesman is losing no proper opportunity to stand in the spotlight. He is the farmers' friend and quite an ardent advocate of agricultural education. The other day he got as far away from home as Waseca where he attended a county meeting in the interest of agricultural education and made a speech thirty minutes long. It was a good speech too and was heartily applauded. Waseca is in the First district. Senator Stephens and Congressman Tawney are hand in glove. The other day when a newspaper was to be brought up which had been insurging and rampaging round in Mr. Tawney's preserves, Senator Stephens' good office were enlisted. Mr. Tawney, between whom and Senator Clapp there is no love lost, may therefore be expected to do Senator Stephens a good turn as occasion arises.

Frank Kellogg's Play.

Still it must not be thought that Senator Stephens contemplates coming out and making a campaign against Senator Clapp. That is not at all the way it is to be worked. Frank Kellogg is relied upon to make the first move. To be sure Mr. Kellogg is just now studiously non-committal. That's not because he hasn't made up his mind. He did that long ago. It's because he doesn't think the time ripe. And the time won't be quite ripe for some months yet—possibly not until after the state convention is held. But the announcement will be made in due time, never fear. In the meantime Senator Stephens will cultivate the farmers, so that when the row begins he will be on hand with the proper sort of backing. There will be others.

Rival Systems.

Senator Stephens would be most unwilling no doubt just now to unnecessarily court opposition of any kind. Unwillingly no doubt he is however, raising up antagonism from which he may hear later on, and innocently enough too. Senator Stephens is, as I have said, preaching agricultural education which we all know is a good thing. On this however, he rides a hobby; and there are others quite as earnest for agricultural education who, too, have their hobby. The trouble is these hobbies run foul of each other. Senator Stephens wants to establish agricultural schools, as he said at Waseca, "such as Crookston has." Other friends of agricultural education want agricultural schools quite unlike the school at Crookston.

The Difference.

Not that there is any objection to such a school as there is at Crookston. That serves its purpose, as does the agricultural college at Hamline and the agricultural school in connection otherwise. But the men who are now in charge of the educational machinery of the state don't exactly believe in confining agricultural education to such schools as these. They don't believe in sending the children who want to learn farming off to herd for themselves. They don't think that the best way. They think it will create undesirable class distinctions to have farmer boys and girls in one school and city boys and girls in another school. They think that association in the same schools would do both country boys and girls and city boys and girls good, and teach both respect for and appreciation of each other. Moreover they think that those who want to learn farming ought to have an opportunity to learn it near home and not be obliged to go away from home to attend such a school as they have at Crookston, although they are ready to admit that the school at Crookston is a splendid school.

An Instance in Point.

Take the case of Warren, for instance. Warren is only thirty miles from Crookston—surely not far as Minnesota distances go. One would think that if there were those at Warren who wanted to send their boys and girls to an agricultural school that the Crookston school would seem to them just the place and they wouldn't think of doing anything else but send them to a school so well equipped and with such competent corps of teachers. That however, isn't the way the people of Warren look at the matter. They want an agricultural department in connection with their village schools, and they want it so bad that they are willing to tax themselves to establish a school that their children can go to and at the same time remain at home. They will start their agricultural school early in the spring and they will offer to outlying school districts the opportunity to come in and enjoy its advantages. They have already bought a plot of ground for agricultural demonstration and experimental purposes.

The Putnam Law.

There is a good deal of this sort of thing going on. The movement for local agricultural education is general. This was seen in the keen competition there was to take advantage of the Putnam law providing for agricultural education in the high schools. Under this law an appropriation of $2500 each was made for the support of agricultural departments in ten high schools. Over forty wanted to come in. From these, ten were selected and are doing great work. Several of them are holding farmers institutes this winter. Some have encouraged exhibitions of farm and dairy products, and of work done in the manual training department and in the department of household economics, which are also provided for in the Putnam law. Others propose in addition to giving the full course to regular students and a shorter winter course to all who wish to avail themselves of it, to furnish any desired information on practical farm work, the diseases of animals, etc., to any who will apply for it.

The Law an Experiment.

The fact is that the Putnam law was an experiment but it was an experiment on lines approved by the state department of public instruction and by the state high school board and the state school inspectors. They think it just the thing. They think the ten schools are doing splendid work. They are convinced that the schools are popular. They want the legislature at its next session to make provisions for more of them. Moreover they don't like the activity Senator Stephens displays for another and a different system of agricultural schools. They regard such schools as opposed to the welfare of the agricultural department in the state high schools. They don't want district agricultural schools like the one at Crookston. They don't want one kind of school for the city pupil and another kind of school for the country pupil. They do want ultimately to establish in connection with every high school in the state a department of agriculture, of manual training and of household economics of which every child or every citizen may, if he wishes, take equal advantage.

The Corporation Tax.

There are few who are familiar with Governor Eberhart's political affiliations or his business activities who were surprised to hear that he disapproves of the federal corporation tax. The fact of the matter is the tax is very unpopular with the corporations. Down in Illinois they are up in arms against it. They are especially aggrieved at its publicity features. The governor, it appears, objects to its unfairness in that it taxes corporations and does not tax partnerships. Possibly some popular sympathy may be aroused. It's just as well to remember, however, that before a corporation can be taxed it must be shown to do an interstate business and its net income must exceed $5000 annually. The fight the governor proposes to make against the corporation tax is scarcely in the interest of the plain people of the state whose burdens will be lessened by so much as the tax brings. However since Governor Eberhart and Senator Clapp are together on this, it is not impossible that something may be accomplished for their powerful friends.

Who Does He Represent?

They had a congressional election in Illinois the other day. The insurgents were squarely pitted against the stalwarts. Joe Cannon came home to look after things. Senator Lorimore had his machine lined up. The insurgents were howled over and one William J. Moxley was elected to represent the plain people. William J. has a past. He's in the oleomargarine business. He didn't want to pay the ten cent tax on butter colored oleomargarine. He thought he could get around it; so by the use of palm oil, described by the government authorities as "rancid, of bad taste and smell, and considered by this office wholly unfit for use in oleomargarine," he concocted a grease which looked "just like butter." Clever thing too, because he sold it for use as butter. The only trouble was that he was caught at it and an unfeeling judge soaked him $27,499.80. Naturally in the fight to retain the ten cent tax on butter-colored oleo, the dairymen of Illinois won't have an especially ardent champion of their interests in William J. Moxley.

Suing the Government of Which He Is Part.

Another thing. Although Mr. Moxley paid this amount, he paid it under protest. He is now trying to get it back through legal proceedings. Naturally it won't hurt any to have a seat in congress and a voice in the government he is suing. In practice there are some peculiar things about representative government as embodied in our stand-pat congress.

COMMISSIONERS HAVE ORGANIZED

C. A. Lindquist Elected Chairman, W. C. L. Demann Vice Chairman.

Regular January Meeting—Much Important Business Transacted.

The first meeting of the board of County Commissioners for the year 1910 convened at the auditor's office Tuesday, Jan. 4. The board was organized by the election of C. A. Lindquist chairman and W. C. L. Demann vice chairman.

Members were appointed to various committees as follows:

Finance—Johnson, Anbol and Pigeon.

Ditch—Demann, Pigeon and Johnson.

Bond and Interest—Anbol, Johnson and Demann.

Road and Bridge—Pigeon, Anbol and Demann.

Court House and Jail—Demann, Johnson and Pigeon.

It was decided that during the coming year the county will not pay a bounty for wolves. During the past year a bounty of $5.00 for full-grown wolves and $2.00 for cubs has been paid. This action does not effect the state bounty of $7.50 for wolves and $3.00 for cubs which will be paid as heretofore.

Wm. Philion was engaged as janitor at a salary of $50 per month.

The Gazette, the Thief River News and the Thief River Press offered bids for county printing. The Gazette bid contained a proposition to secure the publication of the official printing in the St. Hilaire Spectator. The Gazette was designated as the official paper and all of the county printing will appear in this paper.

Considerable business of importance was transacted and a number of bills were allowed. The official proceeding will be published in the next issue of the Gazette.

Washington.

News of the resignation of President Zelaya at Nicaragua was received with evident satisfaction at the state department and elsewhere but not one syllable of comment could be elicited from any responsible officer of the administration.

SMITH CONVICTED

VERDICT MEETS APPROVAL

Trial of Mrs. Ledbeter Is Begun, on Request of Defense.—Woman's Attorneys Secure Dismissal of Sheriff by Affidavit.

Mankato.—The jury in the case of Frank Smith, charged with the murder of H. J. Ledbeter, a well known farmer of this country, rendered a verdict of murder in the first degree, as charged in the indictment, and also filed a recommendation for leniency. The jury was discharged.

None of the members had heard of Smith's criminal record as related by Sheriff Devine, of Logan county, Ill., and Deputy Warden Dowell, Chester, Ill., penitentiary, and expressed gratification that their judgment was sustained by developments outside the trial.

Smith refused to say anything for publication, remarking that the case was not through yet. If he can get funds he intends to move a new trial preparatory to an appeal on rulings of the court, so his attorney states.

Few spectators were present when the verdict was rendered, but the outcome is generally commended by the public. The publication of Smith's past record crystallized public sentiment against him and much fear had been expressed that the jury, not knowing it, might bring in a verdict in lesser degree.

Mrs. Ledbeter's Trial Begun.

The trial of Mrs. Grace Ledbeter began two hours after the jury retired in the Smith case. This had not been expected by the state, which had made arrangements to take the case up Dec. 27. The defense insisted on an immediate trial, however, and the court so ordered. Mrs. Ledbeter, dressed in black and wearing a heavy black veil that hid her face from the public gaze, and with a fur-lined-cloak over her shoulders, was the center of all eyes as she sat beside her attorneys, S. B. Wilson, A. R. Pfau, Jr., and C. J. Laurish. Her two little daughters, Hazel and Mabel, sat behind her, and near them was their uncle, her husband's brother, P. A. Ledbeter, of Hayward, Wis., her accuser in the present proceedings. The state was represented by County Attorney Walter A. Plymat and Special Municipal Judge W. R. Geddes, and Assistant General G. W. Peterson arrived from St. Paul to assist them, as he did in the Smith trial.

Judge A. R. Pfau, the trial judge, instructed the sheriff and bailiffs to exclude all persons under age during the trial and to prevent any demonstrations whatever and hold spectators back from the jury box.

Twenty-four jurors on the regular panel not on Smith's case were all excused for various causes during the afternoon, the state using two of its 10 peremptory challenges and the defense none of its 20. When court was about to order a special venire of 50 talesmen, the defense filed an affidavit of prejudice against Sheriff J. Donahue, alleging bias against the defendant, and under the law the court had no discretion and directed the venire be placed in the hands of Coroner E. R. Kennedy for service. This is the same procedure as that followed by the defense in the third trial of Dr. G. R. Koch, of New Ulm, in this county, when he was acquitted, and two of Mrs. Ledbeter's attorneys assisted the defense of Koch.

The trial of Mrs. Ledbeter is expected to be watched with more intense interest by the public than Smith's, owing to the many more perplexing features in the case. Numerous witnesses will be subpoenaed by both state and defense, probably three times as many as were secured in Smith's case, as the field for investigation is much wider, particularly as regards motive. This case will be stubbornly fought throughout and several weeks are expected to be consumed in the trial.

SARS GAMBLING IN ROCHESTER.

Mayor James Thompson Decides To Make It a Clean City.

Rochester.—Mayor James Thompson has issued an ultimatum that no more gambling is to be allowed in this city, and orders have been given to the police to this effect. For some time there have been a number of business places that have permitted card games in their establishments, and as a result a number of the younger generation of the city have formed a habit of spending their time in these places.

The attention of the mayor has been called to the growing tendency, and how Mr. Thompson comes out with the statement that he is going to make Rochester a clean city.

"DOPE" CAUSE OF DOWNFALL.

This Is to Be Defense of Itasca County Ex-Treasurer.

Duluth. — The defense has shown its hand in the case of the state against A. A. Kremer, the defaulting treasurer of Itasca county, whose trial is on at Grand Rapids.

It is evidently the intention of the defense to show that the accused was unfitted for business at the time he made the alleged fraudulent entries in the books, as a result of the use of some drug.

Ex-Judge Searle Is Dead.

St. Cloud.—Former Judge D. B. Searle died at his home in this city after an illness of three years. May 29, 1906, Judge Searle went to Long Prairie, to deliver the Memorial day address, and on the same evening he was stricken suddenly with paralysis. He had been under the care of a nurse ever since. He held many prominent positions, the most notable of which were U. S. district attorney, district judge of the Seventh Judicial District and state commander of the G. A. R. He was 68 years of age.

O'REILLY APPOINTED BISHOP.

Will Succeed Late Bishop Shanley of the Bishopric of Fargo.

Minneapolis.—Rev. James O'Reilly, pastor of St. Anthony of Padua church, Eighth avenue and Main street northeast, will succeed the late John Shanley to the bishopric of Fargo. Announcement of the appointment made in a dispatch from Rome which reads:

Rome, Dec. 14.—Approving the recommendations of the consistorial congregation as presented by the secretary, Cardinal De Lai, the pope today appointed Rev. James O'Reilly, now rector of the St. Anthony of Padua, Minneapolis, Minn., to the bishopric of Fargo, N. D., and the Rev. M. F. Fallon of the Provincial oblates of Buffalo to the bishopric of London, Canada.

The bishopric of Fargo has been vacant since last June, when Bishop Shanley died, after a long illness. It is a growing diocese and ranks as one of the most important in the Northwest. The naming of the Minneapolis priest for the place is regarded as a high compliment to the ability and standing of Father O'Reilly as a churchman.

Father O'Reilly is 53 years old. He studied for the priesthood at the seminary of All Hallows, Ireland, and came to the United States when a young priest. He was assigned as vicar at Stillwater, where he served for a number of years and then came to Minneapolis. He has been pastor at St. Anthony of Padua for 25 years.

THREE JURORS ACCEPTED.

State Will Send Counsel to Help Prosecute Mrs. Ledbeter.

Mankato. — Fifteen talesmen were examined in the murder case against Mrs. Grace Ledbeter, and three were accepted as jurors—namely, Charles Polle, a limeburner; Olaf Lundberg, and Adolph Lille, a retired ice dealer. All are of Mankato.

Fears expressed since the case was taken up that Assistant Attorney General Peterson could not return to assist the state in the trial, were set at rest finally by a long-distance message from Peterson, saying he could come as soon as the jury was drawn. The county board had taken steps to appeal to Governor Eberhart for assistance in case the attorney general's office refused it.

Sensational reports heard to the effect that a razor and knife were found in Smith's mattress were without foundation. Smith has had a razor to use since the middle of July, and has returned it regularly to the officials. A knife with broken blades half an inch long was given him by the officials in July to sharpen a pencil, and has been kept on his table even since. He is not suspected of harboring any design to commit suicide, but a close watch is being maintained day and night as a precaution.

DULUTH CANAL IS DENIED.

Waterway to Minneapolis Gets Unfavorable Report.

Washington, D. C. — An unfavorable report upon the proposed canal connecting Minneapolis and Duluth by the way of the St. Croix river was made by Chief Engineer Marshall. "From an engineering point of view," said General Marshall, "the project is practicable, but commercially is impracticable and I do not deem it advisable for the government to undertake it now."

General Marshall states that he supports the board of engineers and the district engineer in their report which is an exhaustive discussion of the condition of the traffic between Duluth and Minneapolis. The board of engineers takes the position that the four railroads extending from Duluth to Minneapolis and St. Paul are amply able to take care of the traffic.

Towle Syrup Plant Destroyed.

St. Paul.—The factory plant of the Towle Syrup company was destroyed by fire, causing a loss estimated at $100,000, covered by insurance. The plant was installed in a three-story brick building eight years ago. The principal product of the factory was syrup, but candies and other sweets were also manufactured. One hundred people are put out of employment by the fire. E. A. Towle stated that some effort would be made to supply the customers of the company and that the plant would be rebuilt.

Investigating Fraternities.

Duluth—The board of education is engaged in an investigation of fraternities existing contrary to law among the students of the Central high school. The legislature took the charters away from all such organizations a year ago, and it is contrary to law for such bodies to initiate new members. Yet it is claimed that there are no less than six fraternities which are secretly supported by the students. The board is making a vigorous investigation with a view of rooting all of the fraternities out.

OFFICIALS KILLED

THREE HIGH OFFICIALS ASSASSINATED IN DIFFERENT PARTS OF THE WORLD.

ACTS HAD NO CONNECTION

Korean Prime Minister, St. Petersburg Chief of Police and Indian Magistrate Removed By Bomb and Knife.

St. Petersburg, Dec. 22.—Colonel Karpoff, chief of the secret police of St. Petersburg, was assassinated early today. He had been enticed to a modest apartment in a remote street of the Viborg district, and there was blown to pieces by a bomb, exploded supposedly by his host, one Michael Vosesskresenki, who had leased the rooms a few days before.

The murderer rushed into the street following the explosion and was captured. An assistant to Korpoff who accompanied him was severely injured. Korpoff was appointed from Backu, where he had been chief of the secret police. There have been several convictions of bomb makers recently.

Bombay, British India, Dec. 22.—Arthur Mason Tippets Jackson, chief magistrate of Nasik in the presidency of Bombay, was assassinated by a native while attending a theatrical performance here last night.

The motive for the murder is supposed to have been the wish for revenge upon the magistrate, who had recently sentenced a criminal to life imprisonment. Nasik is a hot bed of sedition. Jackson had been in the British Indian service since 1888.

ESTRADA WINS VICTORY.

Six Hundred Killed On Field Gonzales Surrenders.

Seoul, Korea.—The prime minister of the Korean cabinet was stabbed to death as an apparent result of the intense feeling in Korea against Japanese influence.

Bluefields, Dec. 22.—General Estrada has won a complete victory over the government troops at Rama. A total of 600 men of both armies were killed or wounded. Nineteen hundred of Zelaya's men have surrendered including General Gonzales, who was in command. Two Americans are reported to have been killed.

The fighting is outside the city limits. The wounded are being brought here. Commander Shipley has landed surgeons from the Des Moines to care for them.

Washington, Dec. 22.—Confirmation of the Associated Press dispatches from Nicaragua were received today at the navy department in a cablegram from Captain Shipley of the Des Moines, now at Bluefields, dated at 3 o'clock this afternoon. Zelaya's loss in killed, wounded and captured, the captain reports, is about 2,600.

GOVERNOR'S GOOD WORK.

Switchmen's Strike Is in a Fair Way To a Settlement.

St. Paul, Dec. 22.—Gov. A. O. Eberhart made one of the most interesting statements today with regard to the strike situation that has been made since Pres. Frank T. Hawley, of the switchmen's union, issued the strike order.

"I am very well pleased over the result of the conferences held yesterday between the railroads and the representatives of the American Federation of Labor's railway department council," said the governor. "I felt that if I could get the men and the roads together," he continued, "that conditions would shape themselves toward a betterment of the situation.

"I did not attend the conference in person but was represented by my secretary, Ralph W. Wheelock. From him I understand that everything is clearing smoothly toward a settlement. Both sides are showing a disposition to be fair in considering the propositions that arise and I feel very well satisfied with the present outlook."

Copenhagen Chagrinned.

Copenhagen, Dec. 22.—The morning papers generally find comfort for the Cook affair in the thought that the only fault that may be charged against the Danes is that they accepted the explorers claims as that of a gentleman.

The Politician says: "Frankly we regret only that a honorary degree was bestowed upon this man by the University of Copenhagen. But one member of the university counselled against the action taken."

The Kobenhaven says: "Cook's abasing of our university is his greatest shame. Fortunately the university itself tells the world of its mistake."

Other papers recall that all Scandinavian explorers who were acquainted with Cook supported him and insist that under the circumstances any other city would have given the explorer a similar reception. They intimate that at the time other cities envied Copenhagen in the opportunity to be the first to welcome and honor him.

Has Cherry Indemnity Plan.

Streator, Ill., Dec. 22.—E. P. Bicknell, national director of Red Cross attended a meeting here at which the Streator relief committee for the Cherry sufferers recommended mediation rather than litigation to fix responsibility for the St. Paul mine disaster and award damages, if the coal company was found at fault. The chairman of the committee and author of the resolution, J. E. Williams, declared he had urged this plan in correspondence with St. Paul Coal Co. and higher officials of the United Mine Workers and had received encouraging replies.

HIS ERROR COST LIVES

BRAKEMAN THROWS SWITCH WITHOUT THINKING.

Total Wreck on Railroads Over the Whole Country—Ten Bad Wrecks With Death in All Save One.

St. Paul, Dec. 20.—"Do you want me to give myself up to the police on my arrival on Nov. 4 in St. Paul?"

After having absent-mindedly thrown the switch connecting the side tract on which an extra freight train was standing at Bladgely, Minn., yesterday connecting the side tract with the main line and which in less than a minute caused the fast Omaha road passenger train to crash into the freight, killing two men and injuring a dozen trainmen, F. W. Herman, head brakeman on the freight, disappeared.

The engineer of the wrecked passenger reported that just as he caught of the switch he saw a man throw it. The Omaha officials began to hunt for the freight crew and found Herman missing. While they were looking for him Division Superintendent Slacker at St. ames received the telegram quoted above signed Herman. The telegram was filed from a passenger train coming to St. Paul. Arriving here Herman reported to the officials of the road and told his story in detail today.

Herman said he had completely forgotten the passenger train. Fully realizing the consequence of his carelessness, he intends to take whatever punishment the law may inflict, as he is nearly prostrated with grief. In the meantime the Omaha railroad officials have not decided what they will do.

Miss Morgan is a daughter of J. P. Morgan. These two women in conference with officers of the union, decided yesterday on a definite plan of campaign, which they believe will result in victory for the strikers. A statement was given to the public today, saying that the two society leaders will provide adequate legal defense for all the members of the union who are arrested while doing picket duty, and will personally take up the work of directing the strikers.

An agreement between the railroads and the trainmen necessitates a notice before any demand such as will be made, can be presented. The trainmen will wait until Jan. 20 for an answer from the railroads, it is said.

Lured to Her Death.

Seattle, Wash., Dec. 20.—Mrs. Dorothy Woodhead, a young and attractive waitress, whose mutilated body was found in Lake Union yesterday, was lured to the spot and murdered.

DISCREDITS COOK

DANISH UNIVERSITY SAYS NO PROOFS PRESENTED THAT HE REACHED POLE.

MERELY HIS STATEMENT

Papers Submitted Are Valueless and Are practically the Same As Published in the United States On His Return.

Copenhagen, Dec. 21.—The University of Copenhagen, the first institution of learning to recognize Dr. Frederick A. Cook as discoverer of the north pole declared solemnly today that the explorer had failed to establish the claim upon which his high honors had been based.

The committee appointed by the university to examine Cook's records recently presented its report to the consistory of the university, which reviewed the documents of the experts with the greatest care, and discussed the findings from every standpoint. That the committee was soon known.

The consistory met today and adopted a written report to the effect that the alleged records submitted for examination by Dr. Cook failed to prove his claim that he had reached the north pole.

The report of the committee, of which Professor Stromgren was the chairman, declared that Cook's papers as presented to the consistory are without any value, that his report to the university is practically the same as that published in the New York Herald upon his return from his arctic exploration. The Copies of his note books submitted, the committee says contains no original calculations or observations but only the results thereof. Accordingly the committee concludes that they afford no proof of his having reached the pole.

No Surprise In New York.

New York, Dec. 21.—News that the university of Copenhagen had declined to accept Dr. Cook's claim that he had reached the north pole came as no surprise to scientific circles here and to many of his friends, who had been prepared for the result by early indications that Dr. Cook's claims would not be favorably passed upon.

Dr. Cook is now in Christiansand, Norway, according to his brother, Wm. L. Cook, who said that the doctor had greatly recovered from the nervous breakdown from which he was suffering when leaving here.

Mr. Cook declared that the explorer was ready to go to Copenhagen to give the university further information concerning his claims. Dr. Cook mysteriously left the Hotel Grammatan in the Bronx, Nov. 24, where he had gone to prepare his records supposing his claim that he had reached the north pole. It now appears that he sailed Nov. 27, on the steamship Caronia for Naples where he remained for several days.

This information was contained in a letter the explorer sent to his brother who said: "Dr. Cook has authorized me to announce that he is in Europe trying to get much needed rest and that is all I can say.

"At the proper time my brother will give out a statement for publication and until he sees fit to do so there will be nothing for his friends to do but to respect his wishes and allow him to remain in seclusion."

New York, Dec. 21.—"If the public knew the truth concerning Dr. Cook's mental and physical condition as it is known by his close friends, they would take a more charitable view of his present unfortunate situation," by H. Wellington Wack, counsel for Dr. Frederick Cook, today when told that the University of Copenhagen had rejected Dr. Cook's proofs that he had been to the north pole.

SENATE WILL PROBE.

Inquiry Will Be Made Into Ballinger-Pinchot Controversy.

Washington, Dec. 21.—The senate today practically decided upon the inauguration of an inquiry into the Ballinger-Pinchot controversy by adopting a resolution introduced by Senator Flint of California, calling for all papers bearing on the case.

At the same time Senator Jones of Washington states that if no one else should propose a resolution of inquiry he would do so after the holidays.

It is expected that the papers will have been received by that time and the senate will be prepared for a searching inquiry and which it is generally believed shall be made.

In making the statement Mr. Jones presented a letter from Secretary Ballinger expressing his desire that an investigation be undertaken and saying that if he entered upon it should be sufficiently broad and far-reaching to cover the entire subject, including the forestry service which he charges with pernicious activity.

Hotel Fire At Winnipeg.

Winnipeg, Dec. 21.—In a fire which destroyed the Metropole hotel on Ross avenue early this morning, John Alcock, a railway checker, was killed, and George Baxter, a painter, and Hilda Brown, a waitress, were fatally injured while jumping in an endeavor to save their lives. Forty people jumped from the windows to the icy pavement, one and two stories below. The hotel is the property of the Great Northern railway of St. Paul.

THE DIVA'S RUBY

SYNOPSIS.

Baraka, a Tartar girl, became enamored of a golden bearded stranger who was prospecting and studying herbs in the vicinity of her home in central Asia, and revealed to him the location of a mine of rubies hoping that the stranger would love her in return for her disclosure. They were followed to the cave by the girl's relatives, who blocked up the entrance, and drew off the water supply, leaving the couple to die. Baraka's cousin Saad, her betrothed, attempted to climb down a cliff overlooking the mine; but the traveler shot him. The stranger was revived from a water gourd Saad carried, dug his way out of the tunnel, and departed, deserting the girl and carrying a bag of rubies. Baraka gathered all the gems she could carry, and started in pursuit. Margaret Donne (Margarita da Cordova), a famous prima donna, became engaged in London to Konstantin Logotheti, a wealthy Greek financier. Her intimate friend was Countess Leven, known as Lady Maud, whose husband had been killed by a bomb in St. Petersburg; and Lady Maud's most intimate friend was Rufus Van Torp, an American, who had become one of the richest men in the world. Van Torp was in love with Margaret, and rushed to London as soon as he heard of her betrothal. He offered Lady Maud $500,000 for her pet charity if she would aid him in winning the singer from Logotheti. Baraka approached Logotheti at Versailles with rubies to sell. He presented a ruby to Margaret. Van Torp bought a yacht and sent it to Venice. He was visited by Baraka in male attire. She gave him a ruby after the American had told her of having seen in the United States a man answering the description of the one she loved. The American followed Margaret to the Bayreuth "Parsifal" festival.

CHAPTER V.—Continued.

Mr. Van Torp was fond of music, quite apart from his admiration for the greatest living lyric soprano, and since it was his fancy to go to Bayreuth in the hope of seeing her, he meant to hear Wagner's masterpiece, and supposed that there would not be any difficulty about such a simple matter, nor about obtaining the sort of rooms he was accustomed to, in the sort of hotel he expected to find where so many rich people went every other year. Any one who has been to the holy place of the Wagnerians can imagine his surprise when, after infinite difficulty, he found himself, his belongings and his man deposited in one small attic room of a Bavarian tanner's house, with one feather-bed, one basin and one towel for furniture.

"Yes, sir."

"I suppose I'm thought close about money," continued the millionaire, thinking aloud, "but I call $5 a day dear for this room, don't you?"

"Yes, sir, I do indeed! I call it downright robbery. That's what I call it, sir."

"Well, I suppose they call it business here, and quite a good business, too. But I'd like to buy the whole thing and show 'em how to run it. They'd make more in the end."

"Yes, sir. I hope you will, sir. Beg pardon, sir, but do you think it would cost a great deal?"

"They'd ask a great deal, anyway," answered the millionaire thoughtfully. "Stemp, suppose you get me out some things and then take a look around, while I try to get a wash in that—that tea service there."

Mr. Van Torp eyed the exiguous basin and jug with some curiosity and much contempt. Stemp, impassive and correct under all circumstances, unstrapped a valise, laid out on the bed what his master might need, and inquired if he wished anything else.

"There isn't anything else," answered Mr. Van Torp, gloomily.

"When shall I come back, sir?"

"In 25 minutes. There isn't half an hour's wash in that soup-plate, anyway."

He eyed the wretched basin with a glance that might almost have cracked it. When his man had gone, he proceeded to his toilet, such as it was, and solaced himself by softly whistling as much of the "Good Friday" music as he remembered, little dreaming what it was, or that his performance was followed with nervous and almost feverish interest by the occupant of the next room in the attic, a poor musician who had saved and scraped for years to sit at the musical feast during three days.

"E sharp!" cried an agonized voice on the other side of the closed door, in a strong German accent. "I know it is E sharp! I know it!"

Mr. Van Torp stopped whistling at once, lowered his razor, and turned a mask of soapsuds in the direction whence the sound came.

"Do you mean me?" he inquired in a displeased tone.

"I mean who whistles the 'Good Friday' music," answered the voice. "I tell you, I know it is E sharp in that place. I have the score. I shall show you if you believe not."

"He's mad," observed Mr. Van Torp, beginning to shave again. "Are you a lunatic?" he asked, pausing after a moment. "What's the matter with you, anyhow?"

"Shall I? Well, now, that's a funny sort of a rule for a hotel, isn't it?"

"I go complain of you," retorted the other, and Mr. Van Torp heard a door opened and shut again.

In a few minutes he had done all that the conditions would permit in the way of making himself presentable, and just as he left the room he was met by Stemp, the 25 minutes being just over.

"I am a musician, I tell you! I am a pianist!"

"It's the same thing," said Mr. Van Torp, working carefully on his upper lip, under his right nostril.

"I shall tell you that you are a barbarian!" retorted the voice.

"Well, that doesn't hurt," answered Mr. Van Torp.

He heard a snort of scorn on the other side and there was silence again. But before long, as he got away from his upper lip with the razor, he unconsciously began to whistle again, and he must have made the same mistake as before, for he was interrupted by a deep groan of pain from the next room.

"Not feeling very well?" he inquired in a tone of dry jocularity. "Stomach upset?"

"E sharp!" screamed the wretched pianist.

Van Torp could hear him dancing with rage or pain.

"See here, whoever you are, don't call names! I don't like it. See? I've paid for this room and I'm going on whistling if I like, and just as long as I like."

"You say you make noises you like?" cried the infuriated musician. "Oh, no! You shall not! There are rules! We are not in London, sir, we are in Beyreuth! If you make noises, you shall be thrown out of the house."

"Very good, sir. I'll do what I can, sir," said the excellent man, as Mr. Van Torp pointed to the things that lay about.

"I Tell You, I Know It Is E Sharp."

As he went out, he recognized the voice of his neighbor, who was talking excitedly in voluble German, somewhere at the back of the house.

"He's complaining now," thought Mr. Van Torp, with something like a smile.

He had already been to the best hotel, in the hope of obtaining rooms, and he had no difficulty in finding it again. He asked for Mme. da Cordova. She was at home, for it was an off-day; he sent in his card, and was presently led to her sitting room. Times had changed. Six months earlier he would have been told that there had been a mistake and that she had gone out.

She was alone; a letter she had been writing lay unfinished on the queer little desk near the shaded window, and her pen had fallen across the paper. On the round table in the middle of the small bare room there stood a plain white vase full of cornflowers and poppies, and Margaret was standing there, rearranging them, or pretending to do so.

She was looking her very best, and as she raised her eyes and greeted him with a friendly smile, Mr. Van Torp thought she had never been so handsome before.

Margaret held out her hand and he took it; and though its touch and her friendly smile were like a taste of heaven just then, he pressed her fingers neither too much nor too little, and his face betrayed no emotion.

"It's very kind of you to receive me, Miss Donne," he said quietly.

"I think it's very kind of you to come and see me," Margaret answered. "Come and sit down and tell me how you got here—and why!"

"Well," he answered slowly, as they seated themselves side by side on the hard green sofa. "I don't suppose I can explain, so that you'll understand, but I'll try. Different kinds of things brought me. I heard you were here from Lady Maud, and I thought perhaps I might have an opportunity for a little talk. And then—oh, I don't know. I've seen everything worth seeing except a battle and 'Parsifal,' and as it seemed so easy, and you were here, I thought I'd have a look at the opera, since I can't see the fight."

Margaret laughed a little.

"I hope you will like it," she said. "Have you a good seat?"

"I haven't got a ticket yet," answered Mr. Van Torp, in blissful ignorance.

"No seat!" The prima donna's surprise was almost dramatic. "But how in the world do you expect to get one now? Don't you know that the seats for 'Parsifal' are all taken months beforehand?"

"Are they really?" He was very calm about it. "Then I suppose I shall have to get a ticket from a speculator. I don't see anything hard about that."

"My dear friend, there are no speculators here, and there are no tickets to be had. You might as well ask for the moon!"

"I can stand, then. I'm not afraid of getting tired."

"There are no standing places at all! No one is allowed to go in who has not a seat. A week ago you might possibly have picked up one in Munich, given up by some one at the last moment, but such chances are jumped at! I wonder that you even got a place to sleep!"

"Well, it's not much of a place," said Mr. Van Torp, thoughtfully. "There's one room the size of a horse-box, one bed, one basin, one pitcher and one towel, and I've brought my valet with me. I've concluded to let him sleep while I'm at the opera, and he'll sit up when I want to go to bed. Box and Cox. I don't know what he'll sit on, for there's no chair, but he's got to sit."

Margaret laughed, for he amused her.

"I suppose you're exaggerating a little bit," she said. "It's not really quite so bad as that, is it?"

"It's worse. There's a lunatic in the next room who calls me E Sharp through the door, and has lodged a complaint already because I whistled while I was shaving. It's not a very good hotel. Who is E Sharp, anyway? Maybe that was the name of the last man who occupied that room. I don't know, but I don't like the idea of having a mad German pianist for a neighbor. He may get in while I'm asleep and think I'm the piano, and hammer the life out of me, the way they do. I've seen a perfectly new piano wrecked in a single concert by a fellow who didn't look as if he had the strength to kick a mosquito. They're so deceptive, pianists! Nervous men are often like that, and most pianists are nothing but nerves and hair."

He amused her, for she had never seen him in his present mood.

"E sharp is a note," she said. "On the piano it's the same as F natural. You must have been whistling something your neighbor knew, and you made a mistake, and nervous musicians really suffer if one does that. But it must have been something rather complicated, to have an E sharp in it! It wasn't 'Suwanee River,' nor the 'Washington Post,' either! Indeed, I should rather like to know what it was."

"Old tunes I picked up when I was cow-punching, years ago," answered Mr. Van Torp. "I don't know where they came from, for I never asked, but they're not like other tunes, that's certain, and I like them. They remind me of the old days out west, when I had no money and nothing to worry about."

"I'm very fond of whistling, too," Margaret said. "I study all my parts by whistling them, so as to save my voice."

"Really! I had no idea that was possible."

"Quite. Perhaps you whistle very well. Won't you let me hear the tune that irritated your neighbor, the pianist? Perhaps I know it, too."

"Well," said Mr. Van Torp, "I suppose I could. I should be a little shy before you," he added, quite naturally. "If you'll excuse me, I'll just go and stand before the window so that I can't see you. Perhaps I can manage it that way."

Margaret, who was bored to the verge of collapse on the off-days, thought him much nicer than he had formerly been, and she liked his perfect simplicity.

"Stand anywhere you like," she said, "but let me hear the tune."

Van Torp rose and went to the window and she looked quietly at his square figure and his massive, sandy head and his strong neck. Presently he began to whistle, very softly and perfectly in tune. Many a street-boy could do as well, no doubt, and Mrs. Rushmore would have called it a vulgar accomplishment, but the magnificent prima donna was too true a musician, as well as a singer, not to take pleasure in a sweet sound, even if it were produced by a street-boy.

But as Mr. Van Torp went on, she opened her eyes very wide and held her breath. There was no mistake about it; he was whistling long pieces from "Parsifal," as far as it was possible to convey an idea of such music by such means. Margaret had studied it before coming to Bayreuth, in order to understand it better; she had now already heard it once, and had felt the greatest musical emotion of her life—one that had stirred other emotions, too, strange ones quite new to her.

She held her breath and listened, and her eyes that had been wide open in astonishment, slowly closed again in pleasure, and presently, when he reached the "Good Friday" music, her own matchless voice floated out with her unconscious breath, in such perfect octaves with his high whistling that at first he did not understand; but when he did, the rough hard man shivered suddenly and steadied himself against the window-sill, and Margaret's voice went on alone, with faintly breathed words and then without them, following the instrumentation to the end of the scene, beyond what he had ever heard.

"If He's the Fellow We Used to Call Levi Longlegs on the Ranch."

Then there was silence in the room, and neither of the two moved for some moments, but at last Van Torp turned, and came back.

"Thank you," he said, in a low voice.

Margaret smiled and passed her hand over her eyes quickly, as if to dispel a vision she had seen. Then she spoke.

"Do you really not know what that music is?" she asked. "Really, really?"

"Oh, quite honestly I don't!"

"You're not joking? You're not laughing at me?"

"I!" He could not understand. "I shouldn't dare!" he said.

"You've been whistling some of 'Parsifal,' some of the most beautiful music that ever was written—and you whistle marvellously, for it's anything but easy! Where in the world did you learn it? Don't tell me that those are 'old tunes' you picked up on a California ranch!"

"It's true, all the same," Van Torp answered.

He told her of the two foreigners who used to whistle together in the evenings, and how one was supposed to have been shot and the other had disappeared, no one had known whither, nor had cared.

"All sorts of young fellows used to drift out there," he said, "and one couldn't tell where they came from, though I can give a guess at where some of them must have been, since I've seen the world. There were younger sons of English gentlemen, fellows whose fathers were genuine lords, maybe, who had not brains enough to get into the army or the church. There were cashiered Prussian officers, and Frenchmen who had most likely killed women out of jealousy, and Sicilian bandits, and broken society men from New York. There were all sorts. And there was me. And we all spoke different kinds of English and had different kinds of tastes, good and bad—mostly bad. There was only one thing we could all do alike, and that was to ride."

"I never thought of you as riding," Margaret said.

"Well, why should you? But I can, because I was just a common cow-boy and had to, for a living."

"It's intensely interesting—what a strange life you have had! Tell me more about yourself, won't you?"

"There's not much to tell, it seems to me," said Van Torp. "From being a cow-boy I turned into miner, and struck a little silver, and I sold that and got into nickel, and I made the Nickel Trust what it is, more by financing it than anything else, and I got almost all of it. And now I've sold the whole thing."

"Sold the Nickel Trust?" Margaret was quite as much surprised as Lady Maud had been.

"Yes. I wasn't made to do one thing long, I suppose. If I were, I should still be a cow-boy. Just now, I'm here to go to 'Parsifal,' and since you say those tunes are out of that opera, I dare say I'm going to like it very much."

"It's all very uncanny," Margaret said thoughtfully. "I wonder who those two men were, and what became of the one who disappeared."

"I've a strong impression that I saw him in New York the other day," Van Torp answered. "If I'm right, he's made money—doing quite well, I should think. It wouldn't surprise me to hear he'd got together a million or so."

"Really? What is he doing? Your stories grow more and more interesting."

"If he's the fellow we used to call Levi Longlegs on the ranch, he's a Russian now. I'm not perfectly sure, for he had no hair on his face then, and now he has a beard like a French sapper. But the eyes and the nose and the voice and the accent are the same, and the age would about correspond. Handsome man, I suppose you'd call him. His name is Kralinsky just at present, and he's found a whole mine of rubies somewhere."

"Really? I love rubies. They are my favorite stones."

"Are they? That's funny. I've got an uncut one in my pocket now, if you'd like to see it. I believe it comes from Kralinsky's mine, too, though I got it through a friend of yours, two or three days ago."

"A friend of mine?"

He was poking his large fingers into one of the pockets of his waistcoat in search of the stone.

"Mr. Logotheti," he said, just as he found it. "He's discovered a handsome young woman from Tartary, or somewhere, who has a few rubies to sell that look very much like Kralinsky's. This is one of them."

He had unwrapped the stone now and he offered it to her, holding it out in the palm of his hand. She took it delicately and laid it in her own, which was so white that the gem shed a delicate pomegranate-colored light on the skin all round it. She admired it, turned it over with one finger, held it up towards the window, and laid it in her palm again.

But Van Torp had set her thinking about Logotheti and the Tartar girl. She put out her hand to give back the ruby.

"I should like you to keep it, if you will," he said. "I shan't forget the pleasure I've had in seeing you like this, but you'll forget all about our meeting here—the stone may just make you remember it sometimes."

He spoke so quietly, so gently, that she was taken off her guard, and was touched; and very much surprised to feel that she was. She looked into his eyes rather cautiously, remembering well how she had formerly seen something terrifying in them if she looked an instant too long; but now they made her think of the eyes of a large affectionate bulldog.

"You're very kind to want to give it to me," she answered after a moment's hesitation, "but I don't like to accept anything so valuable, now that I'm engaged to be married. Konstantin might not like it. But you're so kind; give me any little thing of no value that you have in your pocket, for I mean to remember this day, indeed I do!"

"I gave nothing for the ruby," said Van Torp, still not taking it from her, "so it has no value for me. I wouldn't offer you anything that cost me money, now, unless it was a theater for your own. Perhaps the thing's glass, after all; I've not shown it to any jeweler. The girl made me take it; because I helped her in a sort of way. When I wanted to pay for it she tried to throw it out of the window. So I had to accept it to calm her down, and she went off and left no address, and I thought I'd like you to have it, if you would."

"Are you quite, quite sure you did not pay for it?" Margaret asked. "If we are going to be friends, you must please always be very accurate."

"I've told you exactly what happened," said Van Torp. "Won't you take it now?"

"Yes, I will, and thank you very much indeed. I love rubies, and this is a beauty, and not preposterously big. I think I shall have it set as it is, uncut, and only polished, so that it will always be itself, just as you gave it to me. I shall think of the 'Good Friday' music and the chimes, and this hideous little room, and your clever whistling, whenever I look at it."

"You're kind to-day," said Mr. Van Torp, after a moment's debate as to whether he should say anything at all.

"Am I? You mean that I used to be very disagreeable, don't you?" She smiled as she glanced at him. "I must have been, I'm sure, for you used to frighten me ever so much. But I'm not in the least afraid of you now!"

"Why should any one be afraid of me?" asked Van Torp, whose smile had been known to terrify Wall street when a "drop" was expected.

Margaret laughed a little, without looking at him.

"Tell me all about the Tartar girl," she said, instead of answering his question.

Van Torp told her Baraka's history, as far as he knew it from Logotheti.

Care Taken of Queen Bee

Workers of the Hive Breed Her with Special Reference to Work She Has to Do.

The truth is, throughout all the wonder-workings of the beehive, the queen is little more than an instrument, a kind of an automaton, merely doing what the workers compel her to do. They are the real queens in the hive, and the mother-bee is the one subject. The workers have made her for their own wise purpose, just as they make the comb and the honey to store in it. The egg she is hatched from is in no way different from any worker-egg. If you take one from a queen cell and put it in the ordinary cell, it will hatch out a common female worker-bee, and an egg transferred from worker-comb to a queen cell becomes a full-grown queen. Thousands of worker-eggs are laid in a hive during the season, and each of those could be made into a queen if the workers chose. But the worker-egg is laid in a small cell, and the larvae is bred on a bare minimum of food, at the least possible cost in time, trouble and space to the hive; while, when a new queen is wanted, a cell as big as your finger-tip is built, and the larva is stuffed like a prize pig through all its five days of embryo life, until with unlimited food and time and room to grow in, it comes out at last a perfect mother bee.—Van Norden's Magazine.

Consternation in Drawing Room.

In "Stories of a Famous London Drawing Room," in the August McClure's, William H. Rideing says:

"The company always included many delightful women, and I remember the consternation caused among them one day by Burnham, the scout. He explained that he attributed his success as a scout to the acuteness of his sense of smell; it was like a bloodhound's. 'There's no one here to-day,' he affirmed, 'who at any time anywhere in the future I could not recognise in the dark. Yes, I could tell you, and you, and you,' nodding at an alluring group in modish apparel, 'by the way you smell.'

"For an awful moment the conversation flagged."

Then I decided to go to our family physician, but he didn't help them. Then I tried two more of our most prominent physicians, but my eyes grew continually worse. At this time a friend of mine advised me to try Cuticura Ointment, and after using it about one week my eyes were considerably improved, and in two weeks they were almost well. Is Prayer Geographical?

Not long ago, in an important county in Ohio, the women and others prayed that it would go "dry" and it did. A few days later, the people in Nassau and Suffolk counties, Long Island, prayed that these counties would become desiccated and a count of the votes showed that there was nothing doing. In both cases only those people prayed who were accustomed to that form of weapon. Accordingly there is a strong suggestion that prayer, like the tariff, is a local issue.

Congress and the president want to know "what is whiskey?" They might refer the question to the temperance committee of the Minnesota senate.

The St. Peter Free Press has been enlarged to a seven-column quarto, all home print and otherwise greatly improved. The Millers are showing splendid ability as newspaper men.

The Warren Register is the champion "stand-pat" organ of northern Minnesota. It worships at the shrine of Taft, Aldrich and Tawney, and even Joe Cannon is a benefactor. Fortunately the disease is not contagious.

The Browns Valley Tribune observes that Secretary Ballinger should cheerfully welcome an investigation, as it couldn't make him less popular in the eyes of the public, and he would stand a chance of getting out with a whitewash.

An exchange says, "wearing of diamonds is no evidence of wealth. If you are a person of small means nobody will think that the diamonds you wear are genuine stones, while if people know you have plenty of money you can make a paste stone pass for a diamond just as well as the real thing."

In an interview, the Norwegian-American Jacob F. Jacobson charges that the liquor interests "sold him out" in the last campaign, and he is out for revenge. Mr. Jacobson says he stands for the conservation of human souls, and doesn't endorse Governor Eberhart's program. Lots of fun ahead, apparently.

John W. Olson, dean of the state agricultural college, emphasized the cash value of a technical education in an address Thursday night to the Plymouth church brotherhood in Minneapolis. "While graduates of the literary and scientific department of the university go begging for jobs at $75 a month," he said, "graduates of the farm school are grabbed up as farm experts by wealthy farmers at salaries ranging from $2,000 to $4,000 a year."

According to figures completed by the postmaster of New York City, money orders calling for $7,524,963 have been sent from this country to Europe during the month of December. This is an increase of $2,258,125 over last year. Nearly $2,000,000 went to England alone, while Italy's people were remembered with $1,732,131 in gifts large and small. There was a gain of 140,519 money orders over the number sent last year.

The county optionists will hold a mass convention at Minneapolis in February. It is expected that every county will be represented, and the first gun in the campaign will be fired. Hon. Jacob F. Jacobson and Gen. E. T. Young are on the program, and it is reported that they will demand a county option plank in the Republican platform. The convention promises to arouse a great deal of interest, and both parties are somewhat apprehensive as to its effect on the political situation.

Minnesota has loaned from its permanent public school fund something over $4,000,000 to other states which draws but three per cent interest. The Crookston Times suggests, and we think the suggestion a wise one, that this money be loaned within the state for drainage purposes. This would help to reclaim considerable areas of land which are now useless for farming. The security would doubtless be quite as good as other states furnish, and the benefit to this state would be untold.

Print paper has gone up 14 per cent since the Payne law reduced the duty. Last spring, under the much higher duties of the Dingley law, print paper was the lowest it has been for years. These are actual facts, though it is hard to reconcile them with free trade arguments. It is another case where theory and conditions do not jibe well—Warren Register.

As the Register ought to know, the tariff on paper in both the Dingley and Aldrich schedules is prohibitive. This fact ought to show that the paper users are entirely at the mercy of the trust. It can still raise the price materially without fear of competition by importation.

Henceforth naturalized American citizens who leave the United States temporarily had better take their naturalization papers with them if they want to get back. The other day an American citizen residing at Fargo, N. D., was refused by United States immigration officials the right to return to his home from Canada because he had forgotten his papers. Six weeks ago he went to Canada to visit a brother, and starting on his return to get home by Christmas, immigration officials held him at Winnipeg until he could receive his papers by which his citizenship to the United States could be proven.

The dailies say that the bankers in the cities are still receiving letters from country banks asking about the law against the issuance of checks for an amount less than $1. The original report that such an order would be enforced was stated authoratively to be incorrect, in recent Washington advices, but many in the country appeared not to have learned the ruling. The Washington authorities state that the law recently revised, was passed, but it has been ruled upon in the attorney general's office and will not be enforced, as it was decided that a check is not money, but merely an order for money.

Arbuckle Brothers, the largest independent rivals of the American Sugar Refining company, have also been caught stealing from the government, says the Adrian Democrat. They admit that for over ten years they cheated the government out of a portion of the customs charges on imported sugar, and voluntarily paid over $695,573 in full settlement of all civil claims against them. But criminal prosecutions of those responsible for the frauds will nowise be hampered or conditioned by the acceptance of money. The total amount received by the government so far from the sugar trust and Arbuckle is $2,830,573.

George Welch, commissioner of immigration is sending circular letters to the commercial clubs, agricultural societies and farmers' clubs urging them to assist the census supervisors in obtaining complete statistics of farm yields. The immigration authorities of Minnesota, he explains, have been hampered in preparing advertising matter to promote the welfare of the state by lack of authentic statistics of the crops. Sometimes the census officials are suspected of being assessors or that their figures will form the basis of assessment and the farmer becomes too conservative. The census reports are valuable for comparison with the yields in other states, and Minnesota can make a fine showing if correct information is obtained.

EXCHANGE ECHOES.

Roseau Region: It is not to be wondered at that the laboring man seeks higher wages and shorter hours—somehow the truth has dawned upon him that increased wages and increased leisure are two chief promoters of happiness and civilizers of men.

Winona Independent: Speaker Cannon's friends and admirers explain that whatever his faults may be, "he's no hypocrite." This same admirable trait manifested itself throughout the career of both Capt. Kidd and Jesse James.

St. Cloud Times: Has anyone noticed any "kicking" on President Taft from the direction of Wall street, as there was when T. Roosevelt held the reins? We recall Harriman sneeringly saying that T. R. "wanted to regulate everything from the size of our families to our religion!" No such remarks as to William Howard Taft. He is one of the Wall Street lords' anointed.

Warroad Commonwealth: According to reliable statistics the cost of living has increased 60 per cent since 1896. The pertinent question to go with that fact is, have wages increased 60 per cent since 1896? The question answers itself, for everybody knows that wages have not perceptibly advanced. Then where does the increased price of living go? There is but one answer—to the people who control the market for staple articles of family consumption. And why should anybody control that market? Well, just because the people are such consummate fools as to let them; that's all. The people like it—they must like it or they wouldn't stand for it; and they do stand for it.

HER HOBBY.

It Led Her to Make Trouble, but She Rectified It.

By FRANK H. SWEET.

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

Is there any one who has no hobby? Well, if there is it is questionable if such person is happy. We live lives—at least most of us do—that lie in beaten tracks.

The merchant that has built up a large business goes to his store every day to do pretty much the same thing. His wife stays at home, looks after the servants and makes calls. The doctor visits the sick and listens to an eternal round of aches and pains.

The clergyman preaches every Sunday and makes parochial visits. With all of us our occupation sooner or later becomes humdrum.

What, then, is our relief, our safety valve?

A hobby.

Hobbies are sometimes mere whims, or they may be a fancy that a certain line of action under certain circumstances is essential. Of such kind was Nell Lambert's.

Her hobby was self control. She was accustomed to say that it was the only cultured substitute for contentment and that the result of its perfect attainment was perpetual youth. The quick growth of a frown habit and the wrinkles that follow in its wake were among her strongest arguments.

Nature makes the cures after all.

Now and then she gets into a tight place and needs helping out.

Things get started in the wrong direction.

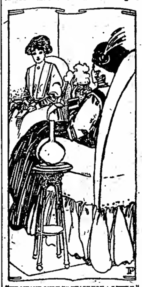
SCOTT & BOWNE, 409 Pearl St., New York

Nell was wooed and won by John Brent. She was very happy, and apparently John was happy too. The world seemed suddenly transformed from a very humdrum affair to a paradise. She managed to retain her self control, so far as telling any of her friends of her engagement was concerned. Then there was a lapse. Her friend Pattie Roane called, and Nell let out the secret.

Not long after Miss Roane's departure Pattie was standing at the parlor window which overlooked the street admiring some flowers that were kept in the window. She was thinking of her lover, and it seemed that the flowers looked up at her with a happy smile. Happening to glance up, her heart seemed to cease to beat.



"WE MEANT ONLY TO TEASE YOU A LITTLE."

There, driving down the street on his dogcart, with Miss Roane beside him, was John Brent. Nevertheless her habit of self control was strong enough to enable her to give the couple a gracious nod and a smile.

What did it mean? Had she not been in that tremulous condition, love, when every shadow is a demon? She would probably have thought that there was no meaning to it whatever. As it was, she considered it in the light of an insult from both John and Pattie.

That evening John called. She received him graciously and chatted with him as if nothing had happened, but before he left told him that their engagement was a thing of the past. All this required great self control, but that self control she possessed.

The three weeks that followed found her still living up to the hobby. If she was a bit whiter and thinner the spirituelle effect was becoming, therefore welcome. There could be a tonic and a change of air should the scrawny stage threaten. Pending that time her maid one morning announced, "Miss Roane."

"Lower the shades a trifle, Lisette," said Nell and glanced into her mirror. "Draw that stand of lilacs nearer, so. Miss Roane may come up."

"How sensible you always are!" said Pattie, making at once for an easy chair. "Here have I for three weeks been afflicted with a conscience, and you—you look as if you never had one."

"Three weeks?" smiling. "It is a long time to carry anything heavy."

"Well," with a look half meek, half mischievous, "I have brought the burden to you."

"To me? I thought a conscience was like a railroad pass—always labeled 'not transferable.'"

"I only want it doctored."

"But that is a very trite idea, is it not?"

"What I mean is not trite," said Pattie. She took a cluster of white lilacs from the stand and gently brushed her face with them. Keen eye shots could pierce such a hedge undetected. "Trite exploits are either easy or necessary."

"If you mean it is hard to do anything original"—

"But I do not. I mean this is original because too hard to be often undertaken."

"Yet it is only a little conscience to be doctored."

"There are things to tell you," gravely, "because we are friends."

"Present tense?"

"Yes," lowering the hedge to give a steady look.

"Very well," with a smile that held some sarcasm lurking beneath it; "tell us."

"That day after you told me of your engagement to John Brent I saw his dogcart before Ransom's, and I happened in, don't you know, and said something about such a royal day for driving and smiled up at him my very best smile. It was a bit of mischief. I knew you would be cool over the matter and wake his resentment."

"'Behold how great a fire a little spark kindleth,'" said unruffled Nell.

"I asked him to drive this way, and he laughed. We meant only to tease you a little—nothing serious."

"No?"

"Not then," bending her face into the lilacs.

"Well," coldly, "he is now free."

An eye shot passed over the hedge.

"Knowing how that drive came about, you are still too proud to recall him?"

Nell settled herself more cozily among the cushions of her divan and gave her prettiest low laugh. "'Is thy servant a dog?'" she said.

"But he would come," said Pattie gently.

"There is a better way to come."

"And if he does not choose it?"

"I am content," sang Nell sweetly.

"Then if he's free," said Pattie, well behind the flower hedge, "I ought to let you understand," hesitatingly, "that—that"—

"Oh, certainly," said Nell mockingly, "each one for herself."

"I should not have put it in just that way," Pattie went on, with a half nervous little laugh, "but I shall not avoid him or be at my worst with him."

"It is a woman's business," dryly, "to charm, especially to charm one man."

"If he is the right one," faltered Pattie Roane.

"True. Yet the wrong one is often entertaining and easier."

"And you do not care?" asked Pattie as she took up and put the flowers back in the vase. "But you'll believe, won't you, that I meant no wrong, that I did not know what would come?"

"You have not finished your story," said Nell, with sudden sharpness. "What has come to him—what has come?"

"If you would be sorry, I think," very low, "that he would be happy."

"Otherwise—in time?" breathlessly.

"Perhaps he may think of me," said Pattie and turned away her face.

She was going silently to the door when Nell, white as her lilacs, came to the lintel.

"You have been honest," she said chokingly, "so I will tell you. I cannot bear it," with a sob, "I cannot!"

Pattie flushed. "Do you want me to go away out of his reach?" she asked with voice that trembled and with lowered eyes.

"No, but I will write and ask him"—alas for the hobby, tears came—"ask him to forgive me."

"I will wait and post the letter," Pattie slowly and went back to her chair.

"He may be angry still, you know," Nell said wistfully when the note was written and her guest on the stair, but there was no answer.

Pattie hurried out to the corner mail box and, having dropped the note inside, came around the turn of the street face to face with John Brent.

"I have been attending to some of your business," she said, with a happy laugh.

"Thank you. It could not be in better hands, I am sure," said John.

"I think so myself," radiantly. "Could you pick a lock or a corner post box?"

"Well, not without some training, I think."

"Then the best thing for you to do is to go up to Nell's. Say the proper thing, you know," rapidly. "Say that you are a wreck from misery and cannot bear it any longer."

"But"—

"That handsome Englishman has been sending more flowers, exquisite white lilacs. If I were you they should go out of a back window."

"But"—

"She will be delighted that you came before the note reached you, but do not hint that you know about it."

"About what?"

"The note, the note, the note!"

"Pick a corner post box," said John dazedly, but with a slight dawning in his eye. "Nell has written me a note?"

"Oh, the slowness of a man's mind!" cried Pattie. "Are you going to stand here after all my brilliant plot while that girl sobs herself ill—ill waiting to know if you forgive her?"

John's answer was in the rapidity of his stride around the corner, and Pattie, the plotter, her face dimpling with smiles and ease of conscience, went far enough to peep and see him run up Nell's steps three at a time.

"Good!" she murmured, with a little chuckle. But it must be admitted that she deserved one.

That was Nell's last effort at controlling her feelings when she felt aggrieved. She had learned that standing out as if the right was all hers without giving the other side a hearing was not self control, but injustice. And Pattie Roane, whose mischievous disposition was always getting her into scrapes which her genial disposition usually got her out of, learned that her propensity for such larks should be curbed by a proper self control.

S.S.S. CURES MALARIA

Malaria is a species of blood poverty known as anaemia. It is a condition in which the circulation is so weak and impure that it is unable to supply the system with sufficient nourishment and strength to preserve ordinary health.

The medical profession is divided in opinion as to the manner in which malarial poison gets into the blood. Some take the position that it is an atmospheric poison, the specific germs of which are breathed into the lungs and thus transmitted to the circulation. Others advance the opinion that persons become inoculated with the poison through the bites of mosquitos. All however agree that MALARIA is a blood affection, and any treatment to successfully overcome it must not only purify this vital fluid, but at the same time add the necessary qualities of richness and strength to the circulation.

The malarial poison destroys large numbers of the rich, red corpuscles of the circulation, and the peculiar paleness of anaemic persons is due to this fact. In the first stages of Malaria there is a bilious condition of the system, constant bodily weakness, poor appetite, and a "no account," tired feeling.

A PHYSICAL WRECK.

During 1900 I was running a farm on the Mississippi River, and became so impregnated with malaria that for a year afterwards I was a physical wreck. I took a number of medicines recommended as blood purifiers, chill cures and malaria eradicators, but nothing did me any good until I began to use S.S.S., which I did about a year ago. The result was that after taking several bottles of the large size I was as well and strong as I ever was, and have never had a chill since. I expect to take S.S.S. every year as a preventive, and would advise everybody else to follow my example.
S. E. COWLEY,
Amory, Miss.

S. S. S. searches out and destroys every particle of malarial infection and builds the blood up to a healthy, nourishing condition. Then the system receives its required nutriment, the bright red corpuscles begin to multiply in the circulation, sallow complexions grow ruddy and flushed with health, the liver and digestion are righted, the appetite improved, and the system vitalized and refreshed in every way. S.S.S. is a safe and pleasant remedy as well as an efficient one. If you have Malaria we will be glad to have you write us describing the case. We will send free our book on the blood and at the same time our physicians will give you some medical advice that will be of great service to you in curing yourself with S. S. S. No charge for the book or advice.

It isn't so difficult to strengthen a weak stomach if one goes at it correctly. And this is true of the Heart and Kidneys. The old fashioned way of dosing the stomach or stimulating the Heart or Kidneys is surely wrong! Dr. Shoop first pointed out this error. "Go to the weak or ailing nerves of these organs," said he. Each inside organ has its controlling or "inside nerve." When these nerves fail them then those organs must surely falter. This vital truth is leading druggists everywhere to dispense and recommend Dr. Shoop's Restorative. A few days test will surely tell! Sold by all dealers.

People are nearly always extra pious just before they are going to break out into the exact opposite.

A woman's idea of when a man's compliments are flattery is when he pays them to another woman.

SKIPPER BEN'S GIRL.

The Treasure That Came to the Lonely Fisherman.

By FRANK H. SWEET.

[Copyright, 1909, by American Press Association.]

If in your travels you ever visit the rugged coast of New England you may come upon the Cove, with its cluster of brown, gray and black wooden houses, having queer, uneven roofs and crooked chimneys, and its narrow strip of pebbly beach, backed by high, forbidding rocks.

You are very likely to find boats drawn up upon the beach, some of them overturned for calking, and great heaps of kelp and seaweed and layers of salt hay, showing how far up the water comes at high tide.

And climbing over the boats or playing along the beach I am quite sure you will find a little girl—a brown faced, barefooted little girl in a faded pink frock, whose hair is like seaweed, a rich chestnut underneath, but faded to a sort of nutty tinge where the sun strikes it.

If you ask this little girl who she is she will peep shyly up at you through her tangled hair, with a pair of eyes that will win your love and admiration at once, and will answer, "Dolly!"

LYING ON THE BEACH WAS A LITTLE GIRL.

Then she will run away and hide among the boats, with her brown curls shaken over her blushing cheeks.

But if you ask any one else, say the old lobster man yonder examining his lobster pots beside his warped and leaky old dory, or, better still, old Captain Graves as he stands on the wharfs every day or sits by the stove in Lisha Tucker's store telling of the fishing when he was young, he will say:

"Thet? Oh, thet's Skipper Ben's gal!"

It is a strange story, and it all happened some years ago—a great many years ago, Dolly would say—when Skipper Ben was not a skipper at all, but merely a brown skinned young fisherman.

He lived with his old mother in the little brown house that stands quite by itself by the waterside and whose eaves almost touch the ground. And over in the blackish looking cottage, with the shingles down the sides, lived his sweetheart, a rosy lass named Dolly.

They had always been friends ever since they were old enough to go about and sailed boats together in the pools among the rocks or fished from the wharfs. As they grew older the cove "just kind of understood" that they were to be married as soon as Ben should become owner or part owner of a fishing vessel.

Ben was an industrious fellow and was always off on the banks. Each time he came home he laid a little money away in an old stocking, for he was saving up to buy his boat, and once while he was on a fishing cruise with Captain Pratt the captain told him of a prime little schooner he had at home in the cove, which Ben might secure for the contents of his stocking and in payment for his services that season.

Ben came home a happy youth. He had already christened his new possession the Dolly. And as he walked up the narrow, crooked street of the little fishing town he wondered why all of his old comrades should look at him with such solemn, pitying glances.

Poor Ben! He soon learned why they all looked pityingly at him. His sweetheart, Dolly, was dead. Two weeks before she had been buried in the little graveyard on the hill.

Poor Ben, indeed!

He was never the same man afterward. He kept the Dolly and took a pride in her, going off to the banks and becoming in time one of the first fishermen in the Cove. But he never was a boy again. All his old light heartedness had vanished, and he became grave, moody and silent. For some years he lived, when he was at home, alone in the little brown house—for his old mother was dead, too. A lonely time he had of it when he was not at the banks. In the evenings he would sit for hours with his pipe, staring into the fire and thinking how different it all might have been if only Dolly had lived.

One night there was a terrible storm, and Skipper Ben sat by his lonely hearth smoking and thinking. The wind blew and howled about the little brown house. It rushed down the chimney and beat against the side of the house until it rocked. But Ben does not notice a bit of wind.

Presently his gloomy thoughts got the better of him. The tiny room seemed to grow as narrow and as suffocating as a grave, and he rushed out into the night and the storm, where he could draw in deep breaths of the wild salt air.

There was no rain, but the clouds were scurrying swiftly across the sky. And well they might with such a wind at their heels.

Such a wind! If Ben had not been the broad, sturdy fellow that he was it would have blown him off his feet. But as it was he strode up and down the beach with long, fierce strides and heeded neither the wind nor the roaring surf.

Was it strange that, with the fierce storm ranging without and the equally fierce storm raging within, Skipper Ben should not have heard the shrieks and cries of distress that night? Not so very strange, I think, but what was strange was that above all the din and commotion he should have heard a feeble wail—the faintest little wail in the world.

But he heard it at any rate and hurried to the spot whence it came.

There, lying on the beach, with its frock securely fastened to a broken spar, was a little child.

"Why, you poor little creeter!" exclaimed Ben as he unfastened the dress. "How'n the world did you git out here?"

The baby stopped crying as soon as she saw him and, stretching out her tiny arms, gave a little chuckle of delight.

He picked her up tenderly and, wringing out the soaked little garments, which were like cobwebs and were trimmed with the finest lace, buttoned her up inside his heavy jacket.

Then it was that he heard the shouts and cries for the first time and saw men running helplessly up and down the beach and gazing seaward.

What were they looking at? Looking at nothing. They were staring and gaping at the place where a good ship had just gone to pieces. Could no one be saved? No; it was impossible. No boat could live in such a surf, and there is, moreover, no lifeboat at the Cove.

The ship went to pieces where she struck. Of all the crew not one lived to tell the tale, and of all the passengers not one was saved except the little baby buttoned up under Skipper Ben's rough pilot jacket.

But the baby lived and was like a sunbeam in the little brown house, for no one talked of putting her in the asylum. Nor is there any orphan asylum at the Cove, though there are orphans in plenty, for many a good fellow goes to the banks never to return, not supposing that he has said goodby for the last time to the youngsters at home.

The baby cried for "mamma" a little at first, but she soon learned to say "Ben" instead. And from that day on the little room never became narrow and stuffy, and Ben's pipe was the pipe of peace and comfort.

The next year, when he went to the banks, he left her in the care of Lisha Tucker's wife at the store, but the year after she cried so hard when he was going that he took her with him. And ever since she has been his constant companion, and he named her Dolly.

Five years have passed since that stormy night, and Dolly is six years old. She is a bright, happy little girl, and she loves the grim old ocean dearly, even if it did so nearly become her tomb.

Sometimes in the evening when the wind is blowing and shaking the little brown house and the fire is roaring brightly and merrily up the chimney Skipper Ben will tell Dolly how he found her lying on the beach securely fastened to a broken spar.

Then he will pull out a little old, worn leather trunk and will take from it the once dainty baby clothes. They are yellow now and still stained with sea water. He will hold the delicate fabric in his hard, rough hand with reverential awe and look with wonder at the little faded blue ribbons that once were shoulder knots.

"I wonder who your parents was?" he says to Dolly. "Only think what you might ha' been! Why, you might ha' been a markis!"

Skipper Ben's round blue eyes become rounder and bluer at the thought, and he takes his pipe from his mouth.

"You might ha' been a dorchess!"

But Dolly shakes her head with her brown curls and lays her cheek against Ben's rough coat, saying: "No, no! I'd rather be Skipper Ben's girl!"

Indigestion

Stomach trouble is but a symptom of, and not in itself a true disease. We think of Dyspepsia, Heartburn, and Indigestion as real diseases, yet they are symptoms only of a certain specific Nerve sickness—nothing else.

It was this fact that first correctly led Dr. Shoop in the creation of that now very popular Stomach Remedy—Dr. Shoop's Restorative. Going direct to the stomach nerves, alone brought that success and favor to Dr. Shoop and his Restorative. Without that original and highly vital principle, no such lasting accomplishments were ever to be had.

For stomach distress, bloating, biliousness, bad breath and sallow complexion, try Dr. Shoop's Restorative—Tablets or Liquid—and see for yourself what it can and will do. We sell and cheerfully recommend

The old fashioned way of dosing a weak stomach, or stimulating the Heart or Kidneys is all wrong. Dr. Shoop first pointed out this error. This is why his prescription—Dr. Shoop's Restorative—is directed entirely to the cause of these ailments—the weak inside or controlling nerves. It isn't so difficult, says Dr. Shoop, to strengthen a weak Stomach, Heart or Kidneys, if one goes at it correctly. Each inside organ has its controlling or inside nerve. When these nerves fail, then those organs must surely falter. These vital truths are leading druggists everywhere to dispense and recommend Dr. Shoop's Restorative. Test it a few days, and see! Improvement will promptly and surely follow. Sold by all dealers.

The New Year
WHAT ITS SIGNS OF PROMISE ARE

by REV. WM. GARDAM.

NEW HOPES, ASPIRATIONS AND AMBITIONS SPRING UP IN THE HEART ON THE FIRST DAY OF THE YEAR.

NEW YEAR'S DAY has ever occupied a peculiar relation to the three hundred and sixty-five days on which are etched the doings and history of a whole calendar year. The Romans observed the day as a public holiday, and on this day all litigation and strife were suspended, social visits were exchanged, presents were given and received, and feasting throughout the empire was the order of the day. The early Christians at first set themselves against the usages of the day as observed by the Romans until the fixing of Christmas day on the 25th of December, and New Year's day came to be observed as the octave of the Nativity and also as the Festival of the Circumcision.

The observance and spirit of the day have not changed very greatly in the onrush of the centuries. We might go back across the long stretch of years between the day we live in and the day when the Romans interchanged their social visits and their good wishes and both gave and received their strenae, and between the then and the now the identity of feeling, emotion and sentiment concerning this day is readily discovered.

So many sentiments crowd themselves into New Year's day and all are mostly children in the way in which the day appears to them and to the simple feelings and emotions by which it is observed. The greeting: "A Happy New Year!" pushes up through the hard strata of the year, and the simple emotions, which make the whole world kin, bring friend nearer to friend and melt life together into a richer affection, and good will becomes the keynote of life on this day. Grudges are dropped, resentments dissolved, and the average man with the average endowment of affection for his fellows finds it almost impossible to vitalize any of his hatreds through the emotion-laden moments of New Year's day. The personal life has many things to say to itself; it is at once a closing of accounts and the opening of a new career. Old things pass away and all things seem to become new. The things that might have been and have not become are forgotten in the new hopes and aspirations and ambitions which spring up in the heart on the first day of the year.

Of course, nobody will ever be what the hopes and faith of the day project for the individual life. The most ardent believer in the better day, the most sanguine architect of the richer fortune yet to be will fall short of the ideal that controls his imagination. But the very fact that the day stirs these noble impulses and floods the prospective days with the glow of hope is in itself an assurance that the year shall be rich in the gifts and the good will of the gods.

Another year! another year!
  The increasing rush of time sweeps on!
Whelm'd in its surges, disappear
  Man's hopes and fears—forever gone!

Oh, no! forbear that idle tale!
  The hour demands another strain,
Demands high thoughts that cannot quail,
  And strength to conquer and retain.

'Tis midnight—from the dark blue sky
  The stars, which now look down on earth
Have seen ten thousand centuries fly,
  And given to countless changes birth.

Shine on! shine on! With you I tread
  The march of ages, orbs of light!
A last eclipse o'er you may spread—
  To me, to me, there comes no night!

The sentiment that phrases itself in the quite depressing words:

The world is very evil,
The times are wearing late, is hardly in tune with the modern spirit when life is thought of as a corporate business and this modern spirit takes account of its own enlarged and enlarging kingdom.

Not the most credulous and believing prophet a generation ago could have forecast the world we know and are perfectly at home with to-day. Bulwer Lytton in his short book, "The Coming Race," endeavored to tell the story and achievement of mankind in the day that was shortly to be, but his seeming impossible world has been more than realized in our own day. The half has not been told. The great note of the day is the large grasp human life possesses over its own career and destiny, the growing confidence that this old yet ever renewing world is solving its own problems, and, under the guiding of that Providence which Pope's well-known lines so beautifully express:

All nature is but art, unknown to thee;
All chance, direction, which thou canst not see;
All discord, harmony, not understood;
All partial evil, universal good, is working for the day of a perfectly ordered and perfectly adjusted civilization. The greater power men is accumulating and employing over his own bodily life, his mastery of the secrets of life which have been hid from the foundation of the world, the realization that man himself is his own providence to a vastly larger degree than hitherto he has dreamed of, and that the "greater things" the greatest of all Teachers foretold ages ago that he should be endowed with competence to do—these he is doing in this very day with a miraculous confidence and a mighty faith. He has discovered that his own commission over life, over the happiness and health and the fruitage of the life that now is, as well as of that which is to come, is a vastly larger commission than the world hitherto has dreamed of. He is finding out that Providence is a partnership and that no man may be a sleeping partner in the business of living without the penalty of losing the very thing that life is—a world of potencies converted into achievement.

This is the note, surely, as civilization faces the year 1910—the note of competency, the sense of added powers to life, the feeling that the greater things are coming on the earth, and that man is using the key to unlock the treasure-house of his own life with a sureness and a wisdom that give promise of a vastly better, richer, juster universe than he has yet known.

Another note of our time is the fact that life mirrors itself in such a wonderful way and the things and forces that make for the better day to be are known and read of all men. We live in the open, and no man may become champion of any cause and keep the world in ignorance of the character of the cause and the nature of his championship. No man to-day may hide his light under a bushel. It is a tell-tale world, and, more than any past time, the world to-day has a juster sense of values and knows both the things that are saving it and the things also that threaten and endanger it. Public service was never so responsible as it is to-day, because civilization never had the almost miraculous power of analyzing and testing the value of public service as in this present year. Public life is an open book, and the most impossible of all impossible things to-day is that any national or international movement should be misunderstood or misinterpreted by the world's best mind. And what is true of public movements is true of public men. No public man can deceive his constituents to-day, for his constituents are the world. And the strong man to-day is the man who frankly recognizes this.

Startling Figures.

The lives of all the 85,500,000 residents of the United States are worth $250,000,000,000.

Unnecessary deaths every year cost in capitalized earnings $1,000,000,000.

Workman's illness annually costs in wages $500,000,000.

Care of the sick and dead every year costs $460,000,000.

Tuberculosis taxes the nation $1,000,000,000, annually.

Typhoid fever costs $350,000,000.

Malaria costs $200,000,000.

HOW TO MAKE NEW YEAR'S RESOLUTIONS

RESOLUTION FOR YOUNG WOMEN

NOT TO INSIST ON GRANDMA WEARING FRENCH HEELS

RESOLUTION FOR YOUNG MEN

NOT TO SMOKE A PIPE IN CHURCH

STRIKE up the band, here comes the good resolution. Let the whistles blow their heads off, let the bells ring out, let the fog horn on the lake front shatter the atmosphere to atoms, let the similar gladsome noises be let loose upon the vibrant ozone even in the uttermost corners of our beautiful city. For the good resolution is marching forward. Only a few days more and we will bask in its splendid presence.

Like the village drum major it comes proudly prancing toward us through the week. Get a seat early and avoid the crowd if you would behold it in its glory. Keep your eyes glued to the splendid spectacle, keep your ears open for the lofty sounds, for it will not be long in passing.

It's safe to say that if all the high resolves that go into effect on New Year's day had half the endurance of a Marathon runner the millennium would come so fast that we'd have to enact new speed laws to keep it from melting the asphalt.

If good resolutions were salt mackerel what a universal thirst would spread abroad!

Human experience seems to indicate that progress in any line is necessarily gradual. Take the flying machine, for instance. At present the scientists engaged in the development of this interesting device are in a position to assert that many of their problems are already solved. They can get up into the air without the aid of dynamite and they can come down again with practically no effort. Of course there are other difficulties to be overcome such as the tendency on the part of the machine to select its own time and place for coming down. But these problems are minor and doubtless the answer is in the book somewhere if they can only find it.

The practice of resolving presents a similar aspect. It is not entirely perfect at present. But considering the few years since Adam inaugurated the outdoor sleeping fad and became grandpa to the human race it is not surprising that some details are still to be worked out. The forming of the resolution has been beautifully worked out, till almost any one, the merest novice, can resolve. The date, too, has been firmly fixed as on the first of January. The chief difficulty that still remains has to do with keeping the resolution once it is made. Something like keeping your aeroplane right side up once you have established a neighborly relation with the stars.

Probably several years will elapse before the custom of resolving reaches perfection and in the meantime it might be well to adopt a makeshift for the present unattainable.

It would seem as if the difficulty might be minimized by more attention to the subjects taken for resolving purposes. It is well to use care in selecting our resolutions, and because of the proximity of January 1, a few suggestions may not be out of place.

For a young woman—Try this one. "I hereby resolve with earnestness to no longer insist on grandma wearing French heels." There are several advantageous features to this resolution. To begin with it is humane. Just think of forcing the poor old lady to teeter down the street with little church steeples under her sole leather! Her silver locks bob under her dignified black bonnet and at every painful step she whispers "Ouch." Fie upon you! Shamey! Remember grandma is not so young as she once was and the penitential efficiency of a bunion is greatly enhanced by the shoving forward of the foot as accomplished by the French heel. Command the old lady to do a cake-walk once an hour around the dining room table if you will, but let her do it in comfortable shoes. Another item in favor of trying this resolution is the fact that you have probably never asked grandma to wear any kind of shoes she didn't like, so it should be that much easier to keep to your resolution not to do so.

For a young man—"I resolve from this day never again to smoke a pipe in church. This sample is highly recommended. The practice against which you issue the edict of banishment is reprehensible in the highest degree. Smoking, while of course it might be a solace to you during the sermon, could not but annoy your neighbors and fellow worshipers. The men envy you, leading to countless domestic difficulties for them. The preacher is unable to see whether all the deacons are awake or not by the haze from your pipe. Moreover, just as a distinguished statesman once officially declared that the odor of cigarettes annoyed him there are those to whom the smell of a pipe is a nuisance and the offertory collector might be one of these. Besides, you would probably be thrown out or arrested or something.

For men who ride much in street cars "henceforth I will not mind the feathers." This is one requiring considerable care—but if strictly adhered to will be found of great assistance in your daily life. When depending from a strap and resting your toes on some neighbor's a long stiff quill suddenly jabs you in the nose giving to that feature the rich red that which another class of resolvists have already acquired, do not release your temper. Smile and pretend you like it. Oft-times you can make yourself believe it, after due practice, of course. But the principal advantage to be cited in this resolution's favor is that "you might just as well." So long as the fashion remains the same you will have your daily communion with the tail feathers of an ostrich or of a rooster and if you resolve not to mind, how much more placid the temper!

For any one who does not raise chickens—"I hereby resolve and determine not to eat any more strictly fresh eggs for several weeks to come." This is in some respects the prize resolution. Its advantages are many, but all the others are overshadowed by this one—you can't get any to eat.

In spite of all the teacher may do the pupil will not learn unless he himself studies. You cannot make successful use of these sample resolutions without effort on your part. But you should find one among them which can be kept with the minimum of struggle. If you have no choice or you are skeptical as to your ability, try the last one.

Worm Turns at Last

It was the old story. The one we have all seen repeated so many, many times. Two young women entered the car together and the tired-looking man arose and proffered his seat. Then, while he groped unsteadily for a strap, the usual conversation ensued:

"Oh, thank you, sir."

"Thank you so much."

"Sit down, dear."

"No, you sit down."

"I insist, dear; I'm not a bit tired."

"Neither am I, and I'd just as soon stand."

"Go ahead, dear, and take it."

"No, no, you take it. I—"

And then the tired man did what so many have wanted to see done so many, many times. He took it himself.

As he sank wearily but calmly back in his seat the smiles of mutual benevolence on the two faces froze into outraged dignity.

"Such impertinence!" snapped one.

"How insulting!" huffed the other.

But on the faces of a score of passengers was reflected more plainly than words:

"More power to you, old boy."

The Federal Constitution.

It is a fact that there was a tremendous and most bitter opposition to the adoption of the present Federal Constitution, both among the members of the various state conventions and in the federal convention. Men like Sam Adams, Patrick Henry, Richard Henry Lee, Yates and Lansing, Luther Martin, George Mason and Thomas Sumter, with many others were from start to finish bitterly opposed to the ratification of the Constitution. When the first vote was taken it was almost a tie in some of the states, New York, for instance, voting 30 for ratification and 27 against ratification. Virginia voted 89 for, 79 against, Massachusetts 187 for, 168 against.

MODEL DAIRY BARN AND HOW TO CONSTRUCT IT

To Profitably Conduct Dairy, Farmer Must Take Advantage of Every Labor Saving Device and Arrangement.

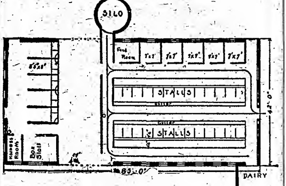
Formerly the farmer first built a small barn or shed, complete in itself, and, as the needs required added others in line about the yards. After a time he would have a colony of barns sheds and pens none of them handy in themselves or convenient to each other and all expensive to keep in good repair. Choring on farms with such barn equipment would be heavy at all seasons of the year and necessitate the expenditure of a great amount of extra labor. On all farms, labor is a very important item, says a writer in Homestead. To profitably conduct a dairy the farmer must take advantage of every practicable labor saving device, machine and arrangement. In the planning of a dairy barn a prime consideration is the matter of convenience. This is, of course, second only to lighting and ventilation. The dairy barn need not be elaborate or expensive, but should be well lighted, well ventilated and convenient.

The combination dairy and horse barn now being built by Mr. B. F. Sheridan on the farm near Fond du Lac, Wis., seems to combine these characteristics in good proportion. The barn, as this drawing indicates, will be 85 feet long and 42 feet wide. The dairy barn proper will accommodate 26 head exclusive of the young things enclosed in the calf pens built along the north wall.

The cows will be stalled in two rows facing outward and toward feeding alleys. Both feeding and gutter alleys will be tracked for either litter or feed carriers. The track will lead to the silo and also out of doors to the manure shed or pile as the case may be. The feed room will be conveniently placed near the silo and handy to the driveway which separates the horse and cow barns.

The dairy inspectors are becoming more and more strict in their requirements and the legislatures of several of the corn belt states last winter passed still more stringent laws affecting the production of milk and the manufacture of milk products. The Wisconsin law is perfectly plain upon several points and upon none is it more so than in respect to the use of separators in stables and barns. Following we give the express language of the bill which was enacted:—"cream produced by the use of a cream separator placed or stationed in any building containing a stable wherein are kept cattle or other animals, unless such cream separator is so separated and shielded by partition from the stable portion of such building as to be free from all foul or noxious air or gases which issue or may issue from such place or stable—is declared hereby to be insanitary."

Like many another progressive dairyman Mr. Sheridan has equipped his barn with a suitable dairy room which houses a gasoline engine, pump and cream separator, and which we believe answers to the requirements of the dairy law. The dairy room also provides a ready entrance to the barn from the residence. Altogether the plan is a very excellent one—it provides opportunity for good lighting, thorough ventilating and is particularly convenient.

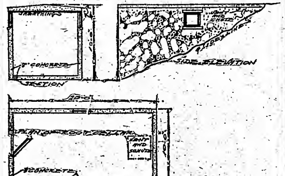


Cow Stable Plan.

Salt for Pigeons.

On one of the largest squab plants in this country, salt is furnished the breeders by dipping the small sacks in water and then allowed to dry until they become hard and firm. These are then placed in the lofts and the pigeons pick out the salt through the sacks. Never give common granulated salt loose.

FROST-PROOF ROOT CELLAR



Roots should be kept cold. Roots are 90 per cent. water, which accounts for their shriveling up so when kept in a warm dry place, as the moisture evaporates and the roots lose a great part of their feeding value. On the other hand, if the cellar is warm and moist, they rot badly.

Roots should not freeze, but they will stand a little frosty weather without injury. You can keep a few bushels of garden carrots packed in sand in a box in your house cellar if you keep the cellar window open. Sand keeps the air away from the carrots, and the open window keeps the cellar cool so they neither rot, sprout nor shrivel. Carrots kept like this are just as nice in the spring as they are in the fall."

Roots when grown in large quantities for stock must be kept on the same general plan. The air in the root cellar must be cool, clean and dry. When this fact is well understood we will get along better in building a root cellar. We must provide opposite windows to be left open in the fall until cold freezing weather; then we must have ventilators in the roof to be left open all winter.

This plan provides for a shallow excavation into a bank if you have one, with a cement wall eight feet high all around. If the cellar is built in a side hill leave a roadway on the upper side so you can fill it easily.

The ceiling joists are imbedded in this wall while it is soft. A thin narrow strip is laid in the soft cement to rest the ends of the joists on to keep them even. After putting them in place build the ventilator shafts.

The ceiling boarding is then nailed on the under side of the ceiling joists and the cement concrete is filled in on the top between the joists and over them about one to three inches, making the top of the cellar about ten inches thick in the center and between six and seven inches at the sides to drain the water off. Then a plaster coat is troweled on top of this to shed water. This plaster coat is mixed one part cement to two parts fine sharp sand. After the roof is finished it is kept wet a week so it will dry hard without cracking.

A wooden slide is fitted to the bottom of each roof ventilator, but is seldom closed. It is well, however, to have it in case of extreme cold weather just to slide in at night to be opened out again the next day.

The Handicap.

Nothing that human ingenuity can invent will ever make man superior to nature's dangers. At the most, we can reach only an irreducible minimum of disaster in navigation. Probably if an accurate comparison were possible of annual volume of traffic and annual loss half a century ago with the figures for 1909, it would show a large proportional decrease in the loss during the time. To that extent man has gained in the race with nature. But his uttermost endeavor will never wipe out the handicap under which he started in the contest.

A Good Horse.

The horse that paws while at pasture is usually a good one. If he expects to come in at a certain time and be fed, it is not to be wondered at that he paws when forgotten. But wire fence is dangerous for such a horse unless it has a pole inside the fence to keep him back. If the fence is for horses only, it may have its lowest wire 18 to 20 inches from the ground, where the shoe cannot get caught on it.

Scarcity of Fowls.

Indications are that live chickens and fowls are scarce throughout the country as shown by the steady high level of prices. Now and then reports are heard of sales considerably above the market. A carload of desirable western fowls arriving at Boston was reported sold at 17½ cents per pound, which is 1¼ cents above the regular prices. Such a transaction would not be possible were the supply anywhere equal to the demand.

Only one in ten balky horses is born so. The others are a manufactured article pure and simple.

COUNTRY WHOSE SOIL SPELLS WHEAT AND OUT OF WHOSE FARMS THOUSANDS ARE GROWING RICH.

WHAT PRESIDENT TAFT AND OTHERS THINK OF CANADA.

Another Fat Year for the Canadian West.

Our Canadian neighbors to the north are again rejoicing over an abundant harvest, and reports from reliable sources go to show that the total yield of 1909 will be far above that of any other year.

It is estimated that $100,000,000 will this year go into the pockets of the Western farmers from wheat alone, another $60,000,000 from oats and barley, while returns from other crops and from stock will add $40,000,000 more. Is it any wonder then that the farmers of the Canadian West are happy?

Thousands of American farmers have settled in the above mentioned provinces during the past year; men who know the West and its possibilities, and who also know perhaps better than any other people, the best methods for profitable farming.

President Taft said recently in speaking of Canada:

"We have been going ahead so rapidly in our own country that our heads have been somewhat swelled with the idea that we are carrying on our shoulders all the progress there is in the world. We have not been conscious that there is on the north a young country and a young nation that is looking forward, as it well may, to a great national future. They have 7,000,000 people, but the country is still hardly scratched."

Jas. J. Hill speaking before the Canadian Club of Winnipeg a few days ago said:

"I go back for 53 years, when I came West from Canada. At that time Canada had no North-West. A young boy or man who desired to carve his own way had to cross the line, and to-day it may surprise you—one out of every five children born in Canada lives in the United States. Now you are playing the return match, and the North-West is getting people from the United States very rapidly. We brought 100 land-seekers, mainly from Iowa and Southern Minnesota, last night out of St. Paul, going to the North-West. Now, these people have all the way from five, ten to twenty thousand dollars each, and they will make as much progress on the land in one year as any one man coming from the Continent of Europe can make, doing the best he can, in ten, fifteen, or twenty years."

It is evident from the welcome given American settlers in Canada that the Canadian people appreciate them. Writing from Southern Alberta recently an American farmer says:—

"We are giving them some new ideas about being good farmers, and they are giving us some new ideas about being good citizens. They have a law against taking liquor into the Indian Reservation. One of our fellows was caught on a reservation with a bottle on him, and it cost him $50. One of the Canadian Mounted Police found him, and let me tell you, they find everyone who tries to go up against the laws of the country.

"On Saturday night, every bar-room is closed, at exactly 7 o'clock. Why? Because it is the law, and it's the same with every other law. There isn't a bad man in the whole district, and a woman can come home from town to the farm at midnight if she wants to, alone. That's Canada's idea how to run a frontier; they have certainly taught us a lot.

"On the other hand, we are running their farms for them better than any other class of farmers. I guess I can say this without boasting, and the Canadians appreciate us. We turn out to celebrate Dominion Day; they are glad to have us help to farm the country; they know how to govern; we know how to work."

Another farmer, from Minnesota, who settled in Central Saskatchewan some years ago, has the following to say about the country:—

"My wife and I have done well enough since we came from the States; we can live anyway. We came in the spring of 1901 with the first carload of settlers' effects unloaded in these parts and built the first shanty between Saskatoon and Lumsden. We brought with our car of settlers' effects the sum of $1800 in cash, to-day we are worth $40,000. We 'proved up' one of the finest farms in Western Canada and bought 320 acres at $3 per acre. We took good crops off the land for four years, at the end of which we had $8000 worth of improvements in the way of buildings, etc., and had planted three acres of trees. Two years ago we got such a good offer that we sold our land at $45 per acre. From the above you will see that we have not done badly since our arrival."

Prof. Thomas Shaw of St. Paul, Minnesota, with a number of other well known editors of American farm journals, toured Western Canada recently, and in an interview at Winnipeg said in part:—

"With regard to the settlement of the West I should say that it is only well begun. I have estimated that in Manitoba one-tenth of the land has been broken, in Saskatchewan one-thirtieth and in Alberta, one-hundred and seventy-fifth. I am satisfied that in all three provinces grain can be grown successfully up to the sixtieth parallel and in the years to come your vacant land will be taken at a rate of which you have at present no conception. We have enough people in the United States alone, who want homes, to take up this land.

"What you must do in Western Canada is to raise more live stock. When you are doing what you ought to do in this regard, the land which is now selling for $20 per acre will be worth from $50 to $100 per acre. It is as good land as that which is selling for more than $100 per acre in the corn belt.

"I would rather raise cattle in Western Canada than in the corn belt of the United States. You can get your food cheaper and the climate is better for the purpose. We have a better market, but your market will improve faster than your farmers will produce the supplies. Winter wheat can be grown in one-half of the country through which I have passed, and alfalfa and one of the varieties of clover in three-fourths of it. The farmers do not believe this, but it is true."

Keeping pace with wheat production, the growth of railways has been quite as wonderful, and the whole country from Winnipeg to the Rocky Mountains will soon be a net-work of trunk and branch lines. Three great transcontinental lines are pushing construction in every direction, and at each siding the grain elevator is to be found. Manitoba being the first settled province, has now an elevator capacity of upwards of 25,000,000 bushels, Saskatchewan 20,000,00, and Alberta about 7,000,000, while the capacity of elevators at Fort William and Port Arthur, on the Great Lakes is upwards of 20,000,000 more.

Within the provinces of Manitoba Saskatchewan and Alberta there are flour and oatmeal mills with a combined capacity of 25,000 barrels per day, and situated along some famous water powers in New Ontario, there are larger mills than will be found anywhere in the Prairie Provinces.

Last year the wheat crop totaled over 100,000,000 bushels. This year the crop will yield 30,000,000 more. A recent summary shows that on the 1st of January, 1909, the surveyed lands of the three western provinces, totaled 134,000,000 acres, of which about 32,000,000 have been given as subsidies to railways, 11,000,000 disposed of in other ways and 38,000,00 given by the Canadian Government as free homesteads, being 236,000 homesteads of 160 acres each. Of this enormous territory, there is probably under crop at the present time less than 11,000,000 acres; what the results will be when wide awake settlers have taken advantage of Canada's offer and are cultivating the fertile prairie lands, one can scarcely imagine.

Ancients Wore Sheath Gowns.

It need not be supposed that even feminine fashions can evolve something new under the sun. A learned Egyptologist discloses that the sheath gown was popular among the ladies of the Nile 15 centuries before the Christian era. One gown was made of fine linen, adorned with elaborate designs. The professor thinks that the slit in the side was intended to display the wearer's precious anklets. These ancient ladies also dressed their hair elaborately with puffs and padding. They painted their faces and lips, as shown by rouge and pomade jars. All of this is reassuring to man who may have thought that some of the modern developments of the dressmaker were without precedent in their eccentricity. Once more is demonstrated the fit coupling of the words "eternal" and "feminine."

Public Sentiment Aroused.

Every state west of the Mississippi except Idaho, Wyoming, Utah, Nevada and New Mexico has now joined the fight against tuberculosis. State sanitoria for the treatment of tuberculosis patients have been now established in Minnesota, Idaho, Missouri, Arkansas, North Dakota, South Dakota and Oregon. State Anti-Tuberculosis associations have been organized and are at work in Washington, Oregon, California, Arizona, Montana, North Dakota, Colorado, Nebraska, Kansas, Oklahoma, Texas, Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri, Arkansas and Louisiana. In all these states, strenuous efforts to wipe out tuberculosis are being taken.

Good Jokes

JUST AN EXPERIMENT.

They had taken advantage of the fact that it was little Richard's first visit to the country and filled his childish ears with some ancient chestnuts. With solemn faces they told him when they wanted apple butter. They fed the cow apples, and when they wanted peanut butter they dieted her on peanuts. Richard heard all, but made no comment. Some mornings later they found him heading for the barnyard with a coal-oil can.

"Gracious, Richard!" asked his mother, anxiously, "what in the world are you going to do with that?"

"Why, ma," he responded, innocently, "I was going to give the old cow some kerosene so she could furnish some of that petroleum butter pa talks about."

ALL ON ACCOUNT OF FATHER.

Everybody's on a diet up to our house,
at present:
Mother's awfully dejected, father's look
is seldom pleasant;
We have cut out beef and bacon and a lot of other stuff
We have turned away from sausage, and our fate is pretty tough.

We have had to give up pancakes;
sugar's banished from the table;
Pa and ma are on a diet, so am I, and sister Mabel;
We have turned away from salads and all kinds of pie and meat,
And it's always very dismal when we seat ourselves to eat.

Every day the cook looks at us with a kind of solemn pity,
And I guess she thinks she's workin' for the worst cranks in the city;
Mother's health is simply splendid; sister's well and so am I;
But we're all compelled to diet—father must, and that is why.

"Yes; especially ocean travel," rejoined the man who had just returned from his first trip across the pond.

Hinting Harriette.

Mr. McTardie (speaking of his boyhood days)—My mother called me "the family interrogation point," and said I couldn't be with a person two minutes without asking a question.

Harriette (with suggestive sigh)—You've been with me two hours, Mr. McTardie.

A Natural Suggestion.

"They tell me the chestnut crop is falling off this year."

"Well, I don't know that I've noticed any special new jokes lately."

UNDER TWO FLAGS.

The Union Jack and the Stars and Stripes.

By ANNA BENTLEY.

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

As soon as we had dropped anchor at Valparaiso Jack Hoskins, Tom Archard and I, having been cooped up aboard ship for three months without setting foot on shore, determined that we would get together if possible in the first liberty party and have a good time in the town. Hoskins was a reckless, fearless chap, Archard was not much better on the score of recklessness, while I was the only peaceable one of the trio.

"Now, Hoskins," I said before starting, "I wish you to understand that if you get me into a scrape while we're on shore you and I will not train together again."

"I'll be meek as Moses," he said.

"If he doesn't drink too much," Archard put in.

"Well," I added, "both of you remember that these Chileans are a mighty mean crowd to offend, especially for Americans, when there's not a United States armed ship in the harbor."

"NOW SHOOT IF YOU DARE!"

Having thus lectured my chums, we went ashore. We walked about arm in arm till we met a pretty Spanish girl who looked admiringly on Jack's stalwart figure, when he deserted us for her. I begged him not to go, for the girl was in company with a Chilean, who seemed to me to be loath to turn her over to an American sailor. But the fellow made no objections, and Jack succeeded him. Whether this had anything to do with what followed I don't know, but I have always suspected that it had.

Tom and I roamed the town alone, looking in at the shop windows, taking in one or two shows, and when tired lounged in the tropical gardens, though the perfume of the flowers was rather sickening to me. Finally we concluded we'd better go and look after Jack.

We started up from the gardens where we were sitting at the time and went out into the streets. We hadn't proceeded far before we saw Jack coming toward us. When we met we saw at once that he had been taking aboard more spirits than was good for him. He began to tell us very noisily what a fine time he had had. He had soon parted with the girl, who couldn't speak a word of English, and joined a party from the ship who were having a fine spree.

All of a sudden a policeman appeared and, drawing a sword, hit Jack with the flat of it. Before we could interfere Jack planted his fist under the policeman's chin, raised him off his feet and sent him sprawling on the pavement.

I knew very well that there was but one chance for Jack. If we could run him to the shore, get him into a boat and out to the ship there might be some hope of getting him out of the scrape without serious consequences. Quick as a flash I seized one arm; Tom, following my cue, seized the other, and we set off as rapidly as we could get Jack on for the place where we knew the boats to be.

After turning a corner I released Jack's arm and shouted, "Run, Jack—run for your life!" If he hadn't been drinking he might have got away. As it was the policeman signaled for assistance, and very soon several of the force were on our track. They reached us just before we could get into a boat.

Jack was arrested and marched back to the town. Tom and I followed him, a policeman on either side of him and several in the rear, and saw him taken into the police office. We were not allowed to go in ourselves, but loitered outside till we were thunderstruck at being informed by a man who came out of the building that Jack Hoskins had been summarily tried for attacking a policeman and had been condemned to be shot the next morning. At first we thought the man was hoaxing us, but, getting the same information from others, we made up our minds that it must be true.

After a hurried consultation we determined first to go and inform the American consul of the circumstance, then go to the ship and tell the captain. The consul, however, was the proper person to act in the matter, and we went with him as he hurried away to do what he could in the name of the United States government to save Jack's life. He at first expostulated against the barbarity of executing a man for resisting a wanton attack of a policeman, but as the authorities turned a deaf ear to his expostulation he made a formal protest. No more attention was paid to the protest than to the expostulation.

That night was a distressing one for all our crew, and, as for Jack, it only remained for him to prepare for death. Our captain could do nothing. If the Chilean authorities would not respect a representative of the United States they would not pay any attention to the captain of the crew to which the offender belonged. The harbor was not only bare of a United States fighting ship, but did not contain one of any other nation.

Not a wink did I sleep that night, and when it was light enough for me to see I was scouring the harbor in the hope that some sort of a fighting machine had come in during the night. But I was disappointed. The waters were entirely bare of guns.

The condition of our crew was harrowing. We wanted to fight and had nothing to fight with. To permit one of our number to be shot to death by a lot of Spanish American undersized, bloodthirsty rascals well nigh threw every man of us into spasms. We got together in knots, and many were the foolhardy plans that were proposed to save our comrade's life. But as time wore on and the hour appointed for the execution approached an awful sense of our powerless position settled down upon us and stunned us.

Early in the morning I was made the bearer of a note from our captain to the consul. The captain dared not leave the ship for fear of some move on the part of the men which would not only be hopeless, but get us into more trouble. I was the only man of the crew to go ashore. While I was at the consulate a crowd was gathering in a field in rear of the house to witness the execution. What the note contained I don't know, but on reading it the consul shook his head.

At that moment I saw the British consul, whose house was opposite, come out to raise the British flag. He stood looking at the crowd in the field, and I saw the British bulldog indignation rising in him at the murder about to be committed. With the flag still in his hand he came across the street and, approaching the American consul, said to him:

"You're not going to let them shoot that man, are you?"

"What can I do?" replied the consul despairingly. "I have protested against the act. I am powerless to do more."

Meanwhile Jack had been marched out, and a firing squad was taking position before him.

"Give me your flag!" shouted the English consul. And in another moment the stars and stripes were clutched in his hand with the union jack. Then hurrying across the field, I and our own consul following him, we saw him elbow his way through the crowd and run up to the prisoner. The next instant the United States flag was folded around Jack's broad shoulders, and immediately after the blood red banner of Great Britain was placed over it. Then the consul who had done this, standing a few paces back, faced the firing squad and cried defiantly:

"Now shoot if you dare through the heart of England and America!"

This was too much for the dagos. If the moral power of the United States did not scare them that of the two most powerful nations on the earth and, what was more to them, on the sea was more than they dared defy. Then, too, this combined moral power was displayed in a way to give it full force. To deliberately shoot a man through the two flags representing the two wings of the great Anglo-Saxon race required a nerve that even the valiant Chileans did not possess.

After a hurried consultation the Chilean authorities, suddenly stricken with terror at what they had done and realizing what they had intended doing, hastened to release the prisoner. He was delivered to the American consul. With tears streaming down his cheeks he gratefully pressed the hand of the man who had saved him. Then he grasped that of the American representative. Lastly he permitted me to take his hand in mine.

Who gave the news of Jack's release to those on board our ship I don't know, but shortly after it occurred, when Jack and I went down to the ship's boat that had brought me ashore and which was waiting for me, we saw the crew dancing about, running up the ratlines and hoisting all the signal bunting there was to be had. When we left the shore there was a cheer, while we pulled for the vessel there were cheers, and when Jack climbed the ladder and stepped over the gunwale he found himself on the shoulders of the strongest and tallest men on the ship and was carried around amid a scene of wild rejoicing.

It is a long while since that narrow escape—a tragedy averted by the presence of mind of one man. Where Jack Hoskins is now I don't know, since that was in the days of our youth. Our sailor days have long been over, and we have been long parted. But there is one scene which for dramatic interest stands far ahead of all the events in my life. It is Jack wrapped in two flags, with a firing party before him and the British consul daring the dagos to fire on him, piercing as they must the emblems of old England and her stalwart son, the United States of America.

The main feature about this story is that it is true. The only difference between the arrest, condemnation and intended execution of Hoskins at Valparaiso and this account is that it is here given in story form.

If ex-Judge Barnaby entered our editorial rooms one day last week and fired six shots at us, as he claims, all we can say is that we did not know it. There are days when we are absentminded and pay little attention to things of earth, and this was probably one of them. It wasn't fair of the judge to catch us on an off day.

USING THE NEWSPAPERS

Thief River People Making Big Noise. Much Ado About Nothing. The Investigation.

Whenever the Thief River Falls people don't get what they want in the courts they appeal to the newspapers. If the district court renders a decision that is not pleasing to them the local papers reverse the decision. It is not very effective, but it may be a source of some satisfaction. It is a proceeding that has become habitual because Red Lake Falls always wins in the courts and the Thief Riverites make the big noise. Watching them work off surplus energy has been rather enjoyable, for goodness, Mary, how they do fuss—and sometimes they tell things and give the whole game away.

During the past week they have been using the newspapers and this time it is the metropolitan press, and the people of the northwest are informed that an investigation is being conducted in Red Lake Falls and that before Saturday night Auditor Latendresse and Chairman Lindquist of the county board will be condemned to some terrible punishment. But these men are not aware of their predicament. Work in the auditor's office is being conducted in the usual manner and Auditor Latendresse does not know that he is being investigated. Chairman Lindquist is out on the farm attending to his own business with the same care as he does that of county when on duty as an official.

There may be an investigation. Public Examiner Anton Schaefer has preferred charges of malfeasance in office against Auditor Latendresse and Chairman Lindquist. The Gazette will give a statement of the case. The public and the officials against whom charges are preferred are entitled to that.

It will be remembered that several weeks ago the public examiner's department conducted an examination of the county records. The examiner's report to the governor indicated that the charges of misconduct made by the Thief River people who had petitioned for the investigation were without foundation. One single act of the commissioners was criticised. The commissioners had transferred $35,000 from the ditch fund to the county revenue fund. The vote to transfer was not unanimous and when it was learned that such transfer is not authorized except by a unanimous vote, the act was reconsidered. The act of making such transfer was not unprecedented, similar transfers having been made when there has been idle money in the ditch fund and such money could be used for a short time if placed in some other fund at a saving to the county. On previous occasions it had been considered a business proposition and has been the means of saving to the county on interest account.

Shortly after the examiner made his report he was interviewed by reporters and was quoted as saying that though the transfer without unanimous vote was unauthorized, the money had been transferred back and that there was no indication that any of it had been spent in purchasing a site for a court house and that no doubt money received from insurance companies for the loss occasioned by the destruction of the old building was expended in the purchase of a new site.

Now the examiner charges malfeasance in office. The chairman is charged with having put and declared carried the motion to transfer the funds when it received a majority vote and not a unanimous vote. The charge against the auditor is that of having made the records in the transaction. You ask why the examiner makes the charges at this late date? It's easy. He, too, is on trial and must defend himself. He found that there had been an unauthorized act. That was enough. The Thief River people driven to desperation because of the recent court decision that has settled for all time the county seat removal fight in Red Lake county and that means that thousands of dollars spent by them has gone for naught, have been camping in St. Paul and—well the examiner would not enjoy having it thrown up to him that he conducts the state's whitewash department, so there will be an investigation. No one blames the examiner. He must defend himself and the effectiveness of his department must be unquestioned. But for the information of the publishers of the daily papers it will be stated that an investigation is NOT being conducted in Red Lake Falls at this time. The date set for the hearing is Feb. 25. The Thief River people are "using" the papers now. They have the habit. All of their litigation has been conducted through the press as well as the courts, though they haven't been very successful in the courts.

It is not difficult to account for their enthusiasm in demanding an investigation. A final decree of the supreme court has determined that they cannot defeat the proposition to erect a court house in Red Lake Falls. The commissioners, acting within the law, now have the court's decree which says that they have proceeded legally. The Thief River people have nothing more to lose; all is lost now. So they attack the officials personally. To expect to secure their removal is a vain hope but there is nothing to lose by trying so they are making a grand stand finish. The exaggerated stories sent out from Thief River Falls, of course, do the officials great injustice, and no doubt being held up before the public as dishonorable is not especially pleasing. But the officials and the people of Red Lake Falls are accustomed to trials by newspapers and understand that the rankness of the campaign is due to the wild disappointment of the Thief River people. The officials will welcome the investigation.

That Chairman Lindquist believed that the motion to transfer the funds carried when it received a majority is natural. County Attorney Michelet of Thief River Falls was at the meeting at the time acting as legal advisor of the commissioners. Does anyone charge him with malfeasance because he did not advise the commissioners that their act was unauthorized without a unanimous vote? No one asks for his removal and no one desires it.

The Gazette publishes this long article because the officials are entitled to a fair statement, especially since so many wild stories have been published in the daily press. The Gazette readers may expect a fair report of the hearing—when it is held. In the meantime the Thief River people will probably continue to send wild stories to the daily papers.

CROOKSTON NOW A CATHOLIC SEE CITY

Archbishop Announces Crookston and Bismark as See Cities.

Archbishop John Ireland has made an announcement which will be of supreme interest not only to the Catholics of Minnesota, but to those of the entire Northwest. It is that two new dioceses have been created, one in Minnesota and one in North Dakota.

The archbishop made public this piece of news in the following statement:

"The recommendation of the bishops of the ecclesiastical province of St. Paul that two new dioceses be formed in the Northwest has been favorably acted upon in Rome. They are that of Crookston, in Northwestern Minnesota, and that of Bismarck, in Western North Dakota.

"The new diocese of Crookston takes in all that part of Minnesota west of the easterly lines of Hubbard and Beltrami counties, and north of the southerly lines of Clay, Becker and Hubbard counties.

"The new diocese of Bismarck takes in all the state of North Dakota west of the easterly line of Emmons, Burleigh, McLean and Ward counties.

"The new see cities will be Crookston and Bismarck respectively. A new bishop will be appointed for each one of those new dioceses without any great delay."

The Eckhart Family gave an entertainment in Weed's Opera House on Monday evening before a large and appreciative audience. The music produced by the members of the Company on the Swiss Bells, Marimbaphone, Aluminum Chimes, and Musical Glasses earned for the players a great deal of well deserved applause. The vocal selections—many of which were humorous—were highly pleasing. The entertainment as a whole was of an excellent character.—Ticonderoga, New York News.

RIVERSIDE ELECTION

First Year of the Club's History a Prosperous One.

The annual meeting of the Riverside Club was held at the club rooms Tuesday evening. The first year in the history of the organization has been a successful one. Secretary Hunt's annual report shows that all obligations have been met and that there is a comfortable surplus in the treasury. During the year fine quarters have been fitted up in the Kaus block at an expense of several hundred dollars. That this could be done and yet the financial condition of the club be so satisfactory at the end of the first year is gratifying to the members.

Following the report of the secretary and treasurer and a brief address by the retiring president, S. M. Sivertson, in which he thanked the members for their co-operation and congratulated them upon the club's prosperity, the business of electing new officers was taken up. Theo. LaBissauniere, who served the club as vice president during the year, was chosen president. J. J. Padden is the new vice president and E. G. Buse secretary. Jos. Salley was re-elected treasurer. The five members who will serve the club as directors are: Dr. J. E. Argue, F. L. Furley, A. L. Brunelle, W. S. Ericson, C. R. C. Baker.

The Riverside Club is filling a "long felt want" in Red Lake Falls and its members are pleased that its organization was undertaken a year ago. For the fine record that has been made much credit is due the officers and directors who served the club so efficiently during the first year of its existence.

Her "Steady" a Printer's Devil.

There is a preacher in Minneapolis, says the Better Way, whose daughter has for "company" a young fellow who is just beginning to learn the printer's trade. A few evenings ago at church the good man had for his evening lesson the fourteenth chapter of Matthew, and when he read, in his most stentorian tones, "My daughter is grievously vexed with a devil," the audience tittered.—Ex.

NEW LINE READY FOR 1910 CROPS

All Grading Contracts are to be Completed by July 1, 1910.

A report from Bemidji states that the Soo engineers, who have been establishing the main line right-of-way which the railway will use in building from Plummer to Moose Lake, have completed their work and the company's locating engineers have filed their selections, definitely locating the route of the entire line.

The line will extend from Moose Lake to the Leech Lake dam, east of Leech lake, thence northward to the crossing of the Great Northern, near Schley. From the crossing the Soo will parallel the Great Northern through Cass Lake, Ferris, Rogby and Bemidji, westward to Wilton.

From a point almost directly north of Wilton, the Soo will gradually extend in a northerly course, bearing westward and will cross the Clearwater river at the Nelson dam. Running westward, the road will cross the southeast leg of Four-legged lake; thence the road extends a quarter of a mile north to Leonard postoffice, and to Plummer.

The construction from Moose Lake to Plummer will be comparatively easy, although there are some cuts that require heavy work. There is one cut of 70,000 yards through a hill at Nelson dam; another cut of 85,000 yards at Rugby Brook, near Leonard. The remainder is what might be called "common" grade, averaging about 1,800 yards to the mile. Grading is progressing satisfactorily.

From Moose Lake toward Leech Lake dam rails have been laid on fifty miles of right-of-way, which extends to the Mississippi river, north of Aitkin. The steel is all laid on the Cuyuna line, which is a sixty-mile branch of the main road.

All grading contracts must be completed July 1. The company will have the steel laid in ample time to haul the crops of 1910.

A Minneapolis firm has contracted to build all of the bridges and culverts along this line.

BEMIDJI MAN FOR GOVERNOR

Judge C. W. Stanton Suggested as Candidate For Democratic Nomination.

Governor Eberhart Embarrassed By Enthusiasm of County Option People.

St. Paul, Jan. 11.—Out of the wealth of material for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination the name of Judge C. W. Stanton of Bemidji has recently been brought into prominence. What the chances are of his election do not know, but it would be difficult to name a man who more fully measures up to the highest standard of American governors. He is qualified alike by a character, by talent and by experience. As an orator he takes a prominent place. He has a fine presence, is magnetic and has great social gifts. His popularity wherever he is known has time and again been proved. The confidence imposed in him by representative men of all parties was well illustrated when a year ago a judgeship was created with the full knowledge that he would be appointed to the position.

Judge Stanton has for some years occupied the district bench. The district over which he now presides is the largest in the state. It is not too much to say that in proportion to its population it is the most litigious. The number of cases which come before him at every session of the court is very great and the amount of work he is called upon to do is prodigious. His capacity for work, his poise and his transparent fairness have won for him the confidence of the bar, the clients and the public from which his juries are drawn. Judge Stanton is a self made man. Earlier in life he was the publisher of a country newspaper. In that capacity his talents were recognized by his confreres and he was elected president of the state editorial association. He won also the confidence of the people of his county which, although Republican elected him for two successive terms to the office of Judge of Probate. In the meantime he prepared himself for the bar and afterwards gave up the active management of his paper to practice his profession. When in 1907 increasing population forced the division of the Fifteenth Judicial District, Governor Johnson, with whom Stanton's relations had long been intimate appointed him to the vacancy. The district was overwhelmingly Republican and at the ensuing election Judge Stanton was defeated in a party contest by the narrow majority of 57 votes out of a total of over 18000 cast. Taking the vote in the same counties for secretary of state the Republican majority was 6,098. This extraordinary vote indicates Judge Stanton's popularity among men of all parties in the districts over which he presides.

An Embarrassing Situation.

Singularly enough the proposed county option convention to be held in St. Paul the first of March is assuming the appearance of a movement against Governor Eberhart and is so regarded at the state capitol, although the leaders of the temperance forces have no such design. The marked disinclination of the governor however, to take a stand on this question, his past affiliations and his present political associates make this inevitable. While no word can be extracted from the governor on the subject it is known that the members of his immediate official family have lost no opportunity to belittle county option as political movement and to declare that the sentiment for it was far from general. The open way in which the political representatives of the brewing interests supposed to be in favor at the capitol are lampooned by R. C. Dunn and the prominent part it is known that J. F. Jacobson and E. T. Young contemplate taking in the convention have the effect of making Governor Eberhart's aloofness marked. While it is admitted that he is the logical Republican candidate and while today everything points to his unanimous nomination there is an election to come after; and it is no more than natural that under the circumstances the activity and apparent earnestness of the temperance people should be regarded by the friends and political associates of Governor Eberhart as a disturbing factor in the situation.

Insidious Methods.

The Associated Press, which has in late years degenerated into the mere tool of the interests and which in their behalf practices a systematic discoloration of the nation's telegraphic news, makes it easy to conduct the insidious campaign which is now being made by the Shipping trust for the ship subsidy bill. County Commissioners Have Authority to Issue Bonds for the Erection of a New Court House.

The petition for the rehearing in the case of Martin V. Evanson vs. W. C. L. Demeun et. al. was denied by the supreme court Tuesday.

This is the famous case upholding Chapter 175, Laws of 1905, giving county commissioners the right to issue bonds for the purpose of building a court house in counties not already in possession of public buildings.

This is the last appeal that can be made in this case, and it is now within the power of the county board to issue bonds and construct a suitable building without further delay.

It would seem that the Thief River people had at last reached the court of last resort.

There is one thing more our friends from the north can do. They can come down next summer and help us dedicate the new court house. Come and stay all day. We'll furnish the lunch.

Chas E. Boughton, attorney for the commissioners, yesterday received formal notice from the clerk of the supreme court that the petition for rehearing had been denied, that the case had been finally disposed of and that judgment for costs had been entered against Mr. Evenson.

Letter From Father Fayolle.

The Gazette is permitted to print in part a letter written by Rev. Fr. Fayolle, who is spending the winter at Tuscon, Arizona, to a friend in Red Lake Falls. Father Fayolle's many friends will be interested in his description of the observance of Christmas in the land of flowers and sunshine.

The letter is dated Jan. 2 and a part of it follows: Thanks for your good wishes. Same to you and plenty of them. I have good reasons to believe that Santa was very good to you. Xmas to me here has been what I had to expect—a very quiet one. In fact Christmas here is simply a church affair. We had midnight mass, the bishop officiating. I had to assist him. The Cathedral was richly decorated, full of lights, splendid music, great choir with twenty pieces of orchestra. I said the Thanksgiving mass at 1:30 A. M. And then a regular Spanish or Mexican lunch—spices, spices, chile, red pepper. It takes an iron mouth to eat all that stuff.

"The night was grand, the stars were shining clear and bright, not a cloud, the birds were singing outside amongst green leaves and flowers. The girls wore light dresses, all white, and straw hats. The thermometer stood at 78 above. Maybe you freeze over there in Red Lake Falls. I write to you with my windows open. They are open all day and night.

"All this is beautiful, but I like Red Lake Falls better. Our church, our singing and playing speak more to me than anything else here."

FIRE AT THE "U"

DEFECTIVE WIRING GIVEN AS THE CAUSE OF $75,000 LOSS TO STATE.

CAUSE IS NOT FOUND OUT

Dental Department Is the Chief Loser—Insurance Fairly Large—Inadequate Water Supply Blamed for Seriousness of Fire.

Minneapolis. — Defective electric wiring is said to have been the cause of a fire which practically destroyed the medical building at the University of Minnesota. The loss will be in the neighborhood of $75,000.

The building had been occupied by the dental department for the last few months and was filled with valuable apparatus and instruments. It is the third time that the same building has been on fire, but only slight damage was done on the former occasions. According to the firemen, it was owing to lack of a sufficient water supply that the blaze last night proved so disastrous.

All the students left about a week ago for their homes to spend the Christmas holidays. Dr. C. F. Dight, one of the instructors, was the only man in the building when the fire broke out. It started between the walls on the top floor and soon shot out through the roof. He opened a window and shouted a warning to the watchman, who immediately turned in an alarm.

When the firemen arrived the fire had gained such headway that little could be done, as there was not enough water to drown out the flames. A new valve had been installed in one of the other buildings during the day, which was the cause of turning off the water, at least this is the explanation given by the university authorities.

The building was built in 1893 at a cost of $56,000, but several improvements have been made since. It was known as Millard hall, and more familiarly as the old medical building. Only the upper floor was used by the medical department, however, while the rest of the hall was occupied by the school of dentistry. It was 65 by 125 feet in dimensions and constructed of brick and brownstone. The structure was of three stories and a high basement.

The fire was spectacular and attracted an immense crowd, but the police kept excellent order and the firemen were not hampered in their work.

STATE FAIR PRESIDENCY.

Fight Over Furlong and Underwood Portends New Deal.

St. Paul, Minn.—A "dark horse" candidate for the presidency of the Minnesota state fair board may result from the present agitation revolving about John J. Furlong and of J. M. Underwood, the two leading candidates. Milton C. Griggs, of St. Paul, and F. L. Randall, former secretary of the fair and now president of the Minnesota Trust company, are being mentioned as possibilities.

The situation at the state fair grounds in connection with the rival examinations being made by the governor's auditing committee and the state examiner's special representative, seems to be developing into a tentative struggle between the present administration and the previous administration.

Friends of John J. Furlong say that recent agitation has only cemented his support and they predict his election. Mr. Furlong himself is extremely confident.

Secretary C. N. Cosgrove denies he has any part in the presidency fight and says he is absolutely neutral.

The judges, who made the award were Presidents Northrop of Minnesota, Bridgman of Hamline, T. M. Hodgman of Macalester, J. N. Kildahl of St. Olaf, Matson of Gustavus Adolphus and Donald J. Cowling of Carleton.

Mr. Tetlie was born in Nebraska. He was star pitcher on the college team for four years. He had an average of 94.48 per cent for his four years' studies. He received a freshmen scholarship of free tuition for one year and in 1909 won the Henry Nelson Talle scholarship of $60.

GRAIN GAMBLING

TO GO WAY OF LOTTERIES—TAFT RECOMMENDS STRINGENT LAWS.

AFTER THE SPECULATOR

Root of Evil to Be Reached By Prohibiting the Use of the Mails for the Practice of Speculating Futures.

Washington, Dec. 29.—Gambling in wheat, corn, cotton and other products of the farm will be prohibited hereafter if a recommendation soon to be made to congress by President Taft is enacted into law. The president is convinced that legitimate industry suffers from the gambling in the futures, and he believes the gullible public should be protected from this form of speculation. Accordingly, he has decided to urge congress to adopt a law that will be effective in dealing with produce gambling as was the laws aimed at the sale of lottery tickets and the great concerns that were engaged in the business.

The evil of such gambling will form the subject of a conference soon to be held at the White House. The president is deeply interested, and will make known his views on the question either in a special message or in a report on a bill soon to be introduced by Representative Scott of Kansas, chairman of the house committee on agriculture.

It appears on inquiry that President Taft has given a great deal of study to the question of such gambling. He has observed that the practice has been stopped in many of the states and believes that great good will be done the public if the evil is met in a law of congress.

RAILROADS WITHDRAWN OFFER.

To Abide by Chicago Conference Wage Scale.

St. Paul, Dec. 29.—At noon today the offer of the northwestern railroads to abide by the Chicago wage conference, and to re-employ the striking men as fast as places could be found for them was withdrawn as indicated in the final proposal made in their statement to Governor Eberhart Monday.

The third vice president of the Northern Pacific said today: "That statement meant just what it said and we have not changed our minds." The strikers now are awaiting the result of the conference to be held in Washington, Friday, between President Perham of the Railway Telegraphers Union and members of the interstate commerce commission.

No other developments in the strike situation today.

Six Days' Storm Over.

St. Johns, N. F., Dec. 29.—Eleven New Foundland schooners and their crews of sixty men are believed to have been lost in the Christmas blizzard, while great destruction to property throughout this island colony has resulted. The storm, which reached its height on Sunday, raged for six days, but today had abated considerably. All telegraph lines in the interior are down and reports from inland points are slow in reaching here. The town of Placentia was flooded for three days, and the principal business street of that place resembles an ocean beach.

Educators At Minot.

Minot, Dec. 29.—With hundreds of educators from every part of North Dakota in attendance today the second day of the annual convention of the North Dakota Educational association is proving a great success.

While the convention opened yesterday afternoon only two departments had programmes and the larger majority of the educators did not arrive until last evening and today.

Americans Not Tortured.

Managua, Nicaragua, Dec. 29.—The recent reports that Groce and Cannon, the American recruits in the insurgent army, who were put to death at the command of President Zelaya, were tortured before being shot are untrue.

The facts were in possession of the state department at Washington a month ago and it was generally supposed there that the details of the tragedy had been given publicity through official channels.

Mexicans Cheer Zelaya.

Mexico City, Dec. 29.—Jose Santos Santos Zelaya the self-styled "titular president" of Nicaragua, arrived in this city today. No Mexican officials met him. He was, however, greeted by 200 Central Americans and Mexicans who welcomed the deposed executive with cries of "Long live Zelaya," "Long live Mexico" and "Down with the Yankees."

Chaffee Swindler Suspect Nabbed.

TRAFFIC BADLY TIED UP

EASTERN STATES SWEPT BY A CHRISTMAS BLIZZARD.

Street Car Service and Railroads Caught Entirely Unprepared and Unable to Meet Situation.

New York, Dec. 27.—Late reports this afternoon show that eighteen persons in and near New York perished in the Christmas blizzard or from accidents caused thereby. Six of this number died from exposure after being caught in snow drifts which they were unable to penetrate. Others were drowned and several were killed by trains.

Philadelphia, Dec. 27.—Philadelphia today is still in the grip of the blizzard which descended upon this section of the country Christmas day. General business was tied up worse than for many years and prospects are that it will be several days before conditions become normal.

Railroad traffic and the street car service are still in bad shape. The snowfall was one of the greatest in the history of the weather bureau and caught the railroads, street car companies and other public services concerns wholly unprepared to cope with the situation. Reports received today showed that five persons lost their lives during the storm, most of the deaths occurring during the height of the storm Christmas night and Sunday morning, and in each case death was due to exhaustion.

Boston, Dec. 27.—A $5,000,000 loss is the estimate made today of the havoc wrought in and around Boston by the blizzard which yesterday swept New England and drove a record tide over the coast.

No fatalities have been reported, besides the four known to have occurred yesterday in Chelsea where a tidal wave bursting through a dike along Island End River flooded eighty acres at Homes and forced 2,500 persons to flee, scantily clad, into the raging storm.

Thirty-two cities and towns which last night were plunged in darkness owing to the cutting of the electric light service, hope to have their lighting facilities restored by tonight.

The storm was easily the greatest that New England has experienced in eleven years.

RAILROADS HOLD OUT.

Offer to Accept Wage Scale and Reinstate Men Gradually.

St. Paul, Dec. 27.—All efforts of Governor Eberhart to end the strike have apparently failed because of the refusal of the railroad officials to agree to a reinstatement of the men who went out, to their old positions at once.

Just at present the governor can see no way to bring the contending parties together. The final disagreement came at noon today, when Third Vice President Slade of the Northern Pacific and J. M. Gruber, general manager of the Great Northern, handed the governor a written communication in which they restated their willingness to submit the matter of wages and hours of labor to the Chicago conference, but that they could not agree to reinstate the men to their old positions at once, but would take them back when there were vacancies. The railways have given the men until Wednesday to accept their offer of Friday.

Wreckage of Schooner Found.

Boston, Dec. 27.—Masses of the wreckage apparently from the five-masted schooner David Palmer of Boston, were found on the beach at Hull today, and it is believed that the vessel struck on one of the outer ledges of the harbor during yesterday's storm and went to pieces with the loss of all on board, a total of twelve men. St. Paul, Dec. 28.—All of the leaders who have been in consultation with President Hawley of the switchmen's union have left the city and there were no new developments in the strike situation early today.

President Perham of the Railway Telegraphers', who was chairman of the American Federation of Labor railway section, is in Chicago today and tomorrow evening he expects to be in Washington where he will confer with members of the interstate commerce commission to learn if that body or possibly President Taft may be induced to intervene in the dispute between the switchmen and the railroads and thus avert a general strike.

Pres. G. B. Howley, of the State Federation of Labor, is in Duluth today, leaving President Hawley and his assistants alone in charge of the strike here.

Being asked if the report was true that freight handlers, machinists and clerks unions, which have grievances of their own, would go on strike without waiting further communication from Mr. Perham, President Hawley said:

"Such action on the part of these unions would turn public sentiment against the strikers and would not in any way help the cause. I am not in favor of that kind of a sympathetic strike."

NO PEACE IN NICARAGUA.

General Estrada Will Not Accept the Terms of Madriz.

Washington, Dec. 28.—General Estrada the revolutionary leader in Nicaragua will not accept the extraordinary terms proposed by the new president, Madriz, as a basis for peace. Madriz begged the revolutionary leader not to hinder his efforts for peace. General Estrada in his reply expressed a willingness to meet Madriz' commissioners, but said that the revolutionary party would not recognize the action of the legislative assembly in placing the power in the hands of Madriz.

Chinks Fights in New York.

New York, Dec. 28.—Scores of detectives and uniformed patrol men were sent into Chinatown today to check if possible the outbreak of a tong war in which one Chinaman had been killed and another mortally wounded. Police Captain Galvin states that new assassins, known in the tongs as "gun men" were sent here from Boston following the recent legal execution there of five Hip Sing tong members who were convicted of killing several of the Leong tong men and that their mission was revenge.

Dog Saved the Horses.

Cooperstown.—Horse thieves had five horses securely tied together ready for the trail when they were stopped by the fierce barking of a dog on the Thomas Riley farm near here. Riley was awakened by the dog and went to the barn where he discovered the horses tied together, but the would-be thieves had made their getaway in the darkness. The next morning it was discovered that they had lain in hiding only a few hundred feet from the barn at the time Riley was awakened.

Steamer Had Fire.

Liverpool, Dec. 28.—Fire was discovered in the hold of the White Star liner Celtic last Wednesday, when the vessel was four days out from New York. The liner arrived here safely yesterday. The fire was still burning but its presence was known to none of the 400 passengers. The fire started amid bales of cotton in hold No. 6. The hold had been flooded. The extent of damage could not be determined today.

Collision Kills Seven.

Seymour, Ind., Dec. 28.—Five train men were killed and two were fatally hurt yesterday in a head-on collision on the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern railroad, between freight trains No. 51 and No. 58, twenty miles west of this city, near Fort Ritnar.

Republicans Name Candidate.

Butler, Mo., Dec. 28.—Philip S. E. Griffith of Greenfield, Mo., was nominated by acclimation today by the republicans of the Sixth Missouri district as a candidate to succeed the late David A. De Armond.

Held for S. D. Murder.

Aberdeen, S. D., Dec. 28.—S. S. Stevens today was held for trial for the murder of David G. McKenzie, at Leheau, S. D., two weeks ago. Stevens claimed self-defense, but introduced no testimony at the preliminary trial. MacKenzie was the son of Murdo MacKenzie, wealthy cattleman of Colorado.

Railroads Tied Up.

Deadwood, S. D., Dec. 28.—The heavy snow that has fallen during the last twelve hours, accompanied by high winds, has tied up railroad traffic in this part of the state. The Pierre passenger train is stalled.

SYNOPSIS.

Baraka, a Tartar girl, became enamored of a golden-bearded stranger who was prospecting and studying herbs in the vicinity of her home in central Asia, and revealed to him the location of a mine of rubies, hoping that the stranger would love her in return for her disclosure. They were followed to the cave by the girl's relatives, who blocked up the entrance and drew off the water supply, leaving the couple to die. Baraka's cousin Saad, her betrothed, attempted to climb down a [illegible] overlooking the mine; but the [illegible] killed him. The stranger was revived from a water gourd Saad carried, [illegible] way out of the tunnel, and departed, deserting the girl and carrying a bag of rubies. Baraka gathered all the gems she could carry, and started in pursuit. Margaret Donne (Margarita da Cordova), famous prima donna, became engaged in London to Konstantin Logotheti, a wealthy Greek financier. Her intimate friend was Countess Leven, known as Lady Maud, whose husband had been killed by a bomb in St. Petersburg, and Lady Maud's most intimate friend was Rufus Van Torp, an American, who had become one of the richest men in the world. Van Torp was in love with Margaret and rushed to London as soon as he heard of her betrothal. He offered Lady Maud [illegible] for her pet charity if she would aid him in winning the singer from Logotheti. Baraka approached Logotheti at Versailles with rubies to sell. He presented a ruby to Margaret. Van Torp bought a yacht and sent it to Venice. He was visited by Baraka in male attire. She gave him a ruby after the American had told her of having seen in the United States a man answering the description of the one she loved. The [illegible] followed Margaret to [illegible] "Parsifal" festival. Margaret told the story to Van Torp, who presented her with the ruby Baraka had given him.

"I never heard such an amusing set of stories as you are telling me to-day," she said.

"That particular one is Logotheti's," he answered, "and he can probably tell you much more about the girl."

"Is she really very pretty?" Margaret asked.

"Well," said Van Torp, quoting a saying of his favorite great man, "for people who like that kind of thing, I should think that would be the kind of thing they'd like."

"Send Mr. Van Torp's Man Up, Potts."

The prima donna smiled.

"Can you describe her?" she asked.

"Did you ever read a fairy story about a mouse that could turn into a tiger when it liked?" inquired the American in a tone of profound meditation, as if he were contemplating a vision which Margaret could not see.

"No," said she, "I never did."

"I don't think I ever did, either. But there might be a fairy story about that, mightn't there?" Margaret nodded, with an expression of displeased interest, and he went on: "Well, it describes Miss Barrack to a T. Yes, that's what I call her. She's put 'Barak' on her business card, whatever that means in a Christian language; but when I found out it was a girl, I christened her Miss Barrack. People have to have names of some kind if you're going to talk about them. But that's a digression. Pardon me. You'd like a description of the young person. I'm just thinking."

"How did you find out she was a girl?" Margaret asked, and her tone was suddenly hard.

"It was a question of form, you see," he said awkwardly.

"Form? Formality? I don't understand." Margaret was really puzzled.

"No, no!" Mr. Van Torp was actually blushing. "I mean his form—or her form—"

"Oh, her figure? You merely guessed it was a girl in boy's clothes?"

"Certainly. Yes. Only, you see, he had a kind of fit—the boy did—and I thought he was going to faint, so I picked him up and carried him to a sofa, and—well, you understand, Miss Donne. I knew I hadn't got a boy in my arms, that's all."

"I should think so!" assented the Englishwoman. "I'm sure I should! When you found out she was a girl, how did she strike you?"

"Very attractive, I should say; very attractive," he repeated with more emphasis. "People who admire brunettes might think her quite fascinating. She has really extraordinary eyes, to begin with, those long fruity eastern eyes, you know, that can look so far to the right and left through their eyelashes. Do you know what I mean?"

"Perfectly. You make it very clear. Go on, please."

"Her eyes—yes." Mr. Van Torp appeared to be thinking again. "Well, there was her complexion, too. It's first-rate for a dark girl. Ever been in a first-class dairy? Do you know the color of Alderney cream when it's ready to be skimmed? Her complexion's just like that, and when she's angry, it's as if you squeezed the juice of about one red currant into the whole pan of cream. Not more than one, I should think. See what I mean?"

"Yes. She must be awfully pretty. Tell me more. Has she nice hair? Even teeth?"

"I should think she had!" answered Mr. Van Torp, with even more enthusiasm than he had shown yet. "They're as small and even and white as if somebody had gone to work and carved them all around half a new billiard ball, not separate, you understand, but all in one piece. Very pretty mouth they make, with those rather broiled-salmon-colored lips she has, and a little chin that points up, as if she could hold her own. She can, too. Her hair? Well, you see, she's cut it short, to be a boy, but it's as thick as a beaver's fur, I should say, and pretty black. It's a silky kind of hair, that looks olive. You know what I mean, I daresay. Some brunettes' hair looks coarse and dusky, like horsehair, but hers isn't that kind, and it makes a sort of reflection in the sun, the way a young raven's wing-feathers do, if you understand."

"You're describing a raving beauty, it seems to me."

"Oh, no," said the American innocently. "Now if our friend Griggs, the novelist were here, he'd find all the right words and things, but I can only tell you just what I saw."

"You tell it uncommonly well!" Margaret's face expressed anything but pleasure. "Is she tall?"

"It's hard to tell, in men's clothes. Three inches shorter than I am, maybe. I'm a middle-sized man, I suppose. I used to be five feet ten in my shoes. She may be five feet seven, not more."

"But that's tall for a woman."

"Is it?" Mr. Van Torp's tone expressed an innocent indifference.

"Yes. Has she nice hands?"

"I didn't notice her hands. Oh, yes, I remember!" he exclaimed, suddenly correcting himself. "I did notice them. She held up that ruby to the light and I happened to look at her fingers. Small, well-shaped fingers, tapering nicely, but with a sort of firm look about them that you don't often see in a woman's hands. You've got it, too."

"Have I?" Margaret looked down at her right hand. "But, of course, hers are smaller than mine," she said.

"Well, you see, orientals almost all have very small hands and feet—too small, I call them—little tiny feet like mice."

Margaret's own were well-shaped, but by no means small.

"The girl is in London, you say?" Her tone made a question of the statement.

"She was there two days ago, when I left. At least, she had been to see me that very morning. Almost as soon as she was gone I went out, and in the first shop I looked into I met Logotheti. It was Pinney's, the jeweler's, I remember, for I bought a collar stud. We came away together and walked some time, and he told me the Tartar girl's story. I asked him to dine to-day, but I was obliged to leave town suddenly, and so I had to put him off with a note. I daresay he's still in London."

"I daresay he is," Margaret repeated, and rising suddenly she went to the window.

Mr. Van Torp rose too, and thought of what he should say in taking his leave of her, for he felt that he had stayed long enough.

The prima donna was still looking out of the window when the door opened and her English maid appeared on the threshold. Margaret turned at the sound.

"What is it?" she asked quietly.

"There's Mr. Van Torp's man, ma'am," answered Potts. "He wants to speak to his master at once."

"You had better tell him to come up," Margaret answered. "You may just as well see him here without going all the way downstairs," she said, speaking to Van Torp.

"You're very kind, I'm sure," he replied; "but I think I'd better be going, anyway."

"No, don't go yet, please! There's something else I want to say. See your man here while I go and speak to Mrs. Rushmore. Send Mr. Van Torp's man up, Potts," she added, and left the room.

The American walked up and down alone for a few moments. Then the impassive Stemp was ushered in by the maid, and the door was shut again.

"Well?" inquired Mr. Van Torp. "Has anything happened?"

"Yes, sir," Stemp answered. "They have turned us out of the house, sir, and your luggage is in the street. Where shall I have it taken, sir?"

"Oh, they've turned us out, have they? Why?"

"Well, sir, I'm afraid it's partly my fault, but there must be some misunderstanding, for I'm quite sure I didn't whistle in your room, sir."

"So am I, Stemp. Quite so. Go on. What happened?"

"Well, sir, you hadn't been gone more than ten minutes when somebody knocked, and there was the landlord, if that's what he calls himself, and a strange German gentleman with him, who spoke English. Rather shabby-looking, sir, I thought him. He spoke most uncivilly, and said I was driving him half crazy with my whistling. I said I hadn't whistled, and he said I had, and the landlord talked German at me, as it were sir. I said again I hadn't whistled, and he said I had, the shabby gentleman, I mean, speaking most uncivilly, sir, I assure you. So when I saw that they doubted my word, I put them out and fastened the door, thinking this was what you would have ordered, sir, if you'd been there yourself, but I'm afraid I did wrong."

"No, Stemp. You didn't do wrong."

"Thank you, sir."

"I suppose, though, that when you put them out they didn't exactly want to go, did they?"

"No, sir, but I had no trouble with them."

"Any heads broken?"

"No, sir, I was careful of that. I sent the landlord downstairs first, as he was a fat man and not likely to hurt himself, and the shabby gentleman went down on top of him quite comfortably, so he did not hurt himself either. I was very careful, sir, being in a foreign country."

"What happened next? They didn't come upstairs again and throw you out, I suppose."

"No, sir. They went and got two of these German policemen with swords, and broke into the room, and told me we must move at once. I didn't like to resist the police, sir. It's sometimes serious. The German gentleman wanted them to arrest me, so I offered to pay any fine there was for having been hasty, and we settled for two sovereigns, which I thought dear, sir, and I'd have gone to the police station rather than pay it, only I knew you'd need my services in this heathen town, sir. I'm highly relieved to know that you approve of that, sir. But they said we must turn out directly, just the same, so I re-packed your things and got a porter, and he's standing over the luggage in the street, waiting for orders."

"Stemp," said Mr. Van Torp, "I'd been whistling myself, before you came in, and the lunatic in the next room had already been fussing about it. It's my fault."

"Yes, sir. Thank you, sir."

"And it will be my fault if we have to sleep in a cab to-night."

The door opened while he was speaking, and Margaret heard the last words as she entered the room.

"I'm sorry," she said, "I thought you had finished. I could not help hearing what you said about sleeping in a cab. That's nonsense, you know."

"Well," said Mr. Van Torp, "they've just turned us out of the one room we had because I whistled 'Parsifal' out of tune."

"You didn't whistle it out of tune," Margaret answered, to Stemp's great but well-concealed astonishment. "I know better. Please have your things brought here at once."

"Here?" repeated Mr. Van Torp, surprised in his turn.

"Yes," she answered, in a tone that forestalled contradiction. "If nothing else can be had you shall have this room. I can do without it."

"You're kindness itself, but I couldn't do that," said Mr. Van Torp. "Bring our things to this hotel, anyway, Stemp, and we'll see what happens."

"Yes, sir."

Stemp disappeared at once, and his master turned to Margaret again.

"Nothing will induce me to put you to such inconvenience," he said, and his tone was quite as decided as hers had been.

She smiled.

"Nothing will induce me to let a friend of mine be driven from pillar to post for a lodging while I have plenty of room to spare!"

"You're very, very kind, but—"

"But the mouse may turn into a tiger if you contradict it," she said with a light laugh that thrilled him with delight. "I remember your description of the Tartar girl!"

"Well, then, I suppose the hyena will have to turn into a small woolly lamb if you tell him to," answered Mr. Torp.

"Yes," laughed Margaret. "Be a small, woolly lamb at once, please, a very small one!"

"Knee-high to a kitten; certainly," replied the millionaire submissively.

"Very well. I'll take you with me to hear 'Parsifal' to-morrow, if you obey. I've just asked Mrs. Rushmore if it makes any difference to her, and she has confessed that she would rather not go again, for it tires her dreadfully and gives her a headache. You shall have her seat. What is it? Don't you want to go with me?"

Mr. Van Torp's face had hardened till it looked like a mask, he stared firmly at the wall, and his lips were set tightly together. Margaret gazed at him in surprise while she might have counted ten. Then he spoke slowly, with evident effort, and in an odd voice.

"Excuse me, Miss Donne," he said, snapping his words out. "I'm so grateful that I can't speak, that's all. It'll be all right in a second."

A huge emotion had got hold of him. She saw the red flush rise suddenly above his collar, and then sink back before it reached his cheeks, and all at once he was very pale. But not a muscle of his face moved, not a line was drawn; only his sandy eyelashes quivered a little. His hands were thrust deep into the pockets of his jacket, but the fingers were motionless.

Margaret remembered how he had told her more than once that she was the only woman the world held for him, and she had thought it was nonsense, rather vulgarly and clumsily expressed by a man who was not much better than an animal where women were concerned.

It flashed upon her at last that what he had said was literally true, that she had misjudged an extraordinary man altogether, as many people did, and that she was indeed the only woman in the whole world who could master and dominate one whom many feared and hated, and whom she had herself once detested beyond words.

While these thoughts were disturbing her a little, Mr. Van Torp recovered himself; his features relaxed, his hands came out of his pockets, and he slowly turned towards her.

"I hope you don't think me rude," he said awkwardly. "I feel things a good deal sometimes, though people mightn't believe it."

They were still standing near together, and not far from the door through which Margaret had entered.

"It's never rude to be grateful, even for small things," she answered gently.

Her handsome head was a little bent, and her eyes were turned to the floor as she passed him going to the door.

"I'm going to see the manager of the hotel," she said. "I'll be back directly."

"No, no! Please let me—"

But she was gone, the door was shut again, and Mr. Van Torp was left to his own very happy reflections for a while.

Not for long, however. He was still standing before the table staring at the corn-flowers and poppies without consciously seeing them when he was aware of the imposing presence of Mrs. Rushmore, who had entered softly during his reverie and was almost at his elbow.

"This is Mr. Van Torp, I presume," she said gravely, inclining her head. "I am Mrs. Rushmore. You have perhaps heard Miss Donne speak of me."

"I'm very pleased to meet you, Mrs. Rushmore," said the American, bowing low. "I've often heard Miss Donne speak of you with the greatest gratitude and affection."

"That's nice," Mrs. Rushmore answered with gravity, and as she established herself on the sofa she indicated a chair not far from her.

It was only proper that Margaret should always speak of her with affection and gratitude. Mr. Van Torp sat down on the chair to which she had directed rather than invited him; and he prepared to be bored to the full extent of the bearable.

"I had the pleasure of knowing Mr. Rushmore," he said in the proper tone of mournfully retrospective admiration. "He was sincerely lamented by all our business men."

"He was," assented the widow, as she would have said amen in church, in the right place, and with much the same solemn intonation.

There was a moment's pause, during which the millionaire was trying to think of something else she might like to hear, for she was Margaret's friend, and he wished to make a good impression. He was therefore not prepared to hear her speak again before he did, and much less for the subject of conversation she introduced at once.

"You know our friend, Mons. Logotheti, I believe?" she inquired suddenly.

"Why, certainly," answered Van Torp, brightening at once at the mention of his rival, and at once also putting on his moral armor of caution. "I know him quite well."

"Indeed? Have you known many Greeks, may I ask?"

"I've met one or two in business, Mrs. Rushmore, but I can't say I've known any as well as Mr. Logotheti."

Margaret Gazed at Him in Surprise While She Might Have Counted Ten.

"You may think it strange that I should ask you about him at our first meeting," said the good lady, "but I'm an American, and I cannot help feeling that a fellow-countryman's opinion of a foreigner is very valuable. You are, I understand, an old friend of Miss Donne's, though I have not had the pleasure of meeting you before, and you have probably heard that she has made up her mind to marry Mons. Logotheti. I am bound to confess, as her dear mother's oldest friend, that I am very apprehensive of the consequences. I have the gravest apprehensions, Mr. Van Torp."

"Have you, really?" asked the millionaire, with caution, but sympathetically. "I wonder why!"

"A Greek!" said Mrs. Rushmore, sadly. "Think of a Greek!"

Mr. Van Torp, who was not without a sense of humor, was inclined to answer that, in fact, he was thinking of a Greek at that very moment. But he abstained.

"There are Greeks and Greeks, Mrs. Rushmore," he answered wisely.

"That is true," answered the lady, "but I should like your opinion, as one of our most prominent men of business—as one who, if I may say so, has of late triumphantly established his claim to respect." Mr. Van Torp bowed and waved his hand in acknowledgment of this high praise. "I should like your opinion about this—er—this Greek gentleman whom my young friend insists upon marrying."

"Really, Mrs. Rushmore—"

"Because if I thought there was unhappiness in store for her I would save her, if I had to marry the man myself!"

Mr. Van Torp wondered how she would accomplish such a feat.

"Indeed?" he said very gravely.

"I mean it," answered Mrs. Rushmore.

There was a moment's silence, during which Mr. Van Torp revolved something in his always active brain, while Mrs. Rushmore looked at him as if she expected that he would doubt her determination to drag Logotheti to the matrimonial altar and marry him by sheer strength, rather than let Margaret be his unhappy bride. But Mr. Van Torp said something quite different.

"May I speak quite frankly, though we hardly know each other?" he asked.

"We are both Americans," answered the good lady, with a grand national air. "I should not expect anything but perfect frankness of you."

"The truth is, Mrs. Rushmore, that ever since I had the pleasure of knowing Miss Donne, I have wanted to marry her myself."

"You!" cried the lady, surprised beyond measure, but greatly pleased.

"Yes," said Mr. Van Torp quietly, "and therefore, in my position, I can't give you an unbiased opinion about Mr. Logotheti. I really can't."

"Well," said Mrs. Rushmore, "I am surprised!"

While she was still surprised Mr. Van Torp tried to make some running, and asked an important question.

"May I ask whether, as Miss Donne's oldest friend, you would look favorably on my proposal, supposing she were free?"

Before Mrs. Rushmore could answer, the door opened suddenly, and she could only answer by an energetic nod and a look which meant that she wished Mr. Van Torp success with all her excellent heart.

"It's quite settled!" Margaret cried as she entered. "I've brought the director to his senses, and you are to have the rooms they were keeping for a Russian prince who has not turned up!"

Just There At Right Time

Luncher Saw Possibilities in Flavoring Cheese Sandwiches with "Hair Restorer."

Dr. W. A. Evans, health commissioner of Chicago, declares pasteurized milk to be an overrated article.

"They who expect," said Dr. Evans recently, "wonderful hygienic effects from pasteurized milk are bound to be disappointed.

"In the way of real, tangible results," Dr. Evans went on, "they will get little more than the Atlantic City excursionist would have got if—but listen to the story.

"A Philadelphia gentleman was very bald. Onion juice was recommended him as an infallible hair restorative. Accordingly, every morning, he split two onions and rubbed their juicy flesh very thoroughly over his nude white scalp. The odor was strong, but the gentleman, after a time, got used to it. Throughout his Atlantic City vacation he saw no reason to abandon his daily onion tonic.

"Well, one hot morning on the boardwalk, spying a vacant place beside an excursionist who was lunching out of a paper bag, the Philadelphia baldhead seated himself, unbuttoned his waistcoat, removed his hat, and exposed his head to the cool breezes and the sunshine.

"An overpowering odor of onions arose. The excursionist beside him pausing in his repast, frowned and sniffed. The gentleman fanned himself calmly. The other, sandwich in hand, kept on sniffing and frowning.

"Then, after a minute or two, the excursionist leaned over and said:

"'Excuse me, boss, but would ye mind if I rubbed this here cheese sandwich on yer head so as to give it a flavor of onions? I'm awful fond of onions.'"

The Fake Robbery Again.

It was a fishy looking story. The local agent of a New York corporation out in a Wisconsin town, handling its funds daily, reported a robbery. Two men had come into the office late at night, when he was at work on the books, and at the points of pistols he had yielded up $5,000 of the company's funds. Two days later the confidential traveling agent of the corporation dropped into the town and talked it over with the local man in a quiet way. "In five minutes," he told Tip, "I knew there had never been any robbery. How did I know? Instinct. The story he told was too sweet. There wasn't a flaw in it. It was like a framed-up alibi. You know the best alibi, until you can knock it out, is the one that is invented for the occasion."

BUILT UP GREAT BUSINESS

Frederick Mayer Boot and Shoe Company a Monument to German Thrift and Industry.

That the key to real business success is often based on a sound principle, rather than money, is best illustrated by the reproduction of the following biographical sketch of Frederick Mayer, founder of the F. Mayer Boot & Shoe Company, reproduced from an issue of the German American National Alliance:

Frederick Mayer, founder of the factories at Milwaukee and Seattle now bearing his name, came to this country from Nierstein, Hessen Darmstadt, in May, 1851, and immediately proceeded to Milwaukee, Wisconsin, where he entered the employ of R. Suhm as a journeyman shoemaker.

The spirit that prompted him to seek his fortune in the new world was soon responsible for another change, and in 1852, a year later, he embarked in business on his own accord, making boots and shoes to order as only a German apprenticed artisan knows how. Subsequently a stock of goods was carried and a retail business conducted until 1880, when the manufacture of shoes was engaged in at wholesale to the trade.

In 1890 the business was well established, the foundation firmly laid and the policy well determined. From that time on the growth was more rapid. The capacity of the present Mayer factories at Milwaukee and Seattle is 9,000 pair per day, giving employment to an army of people, paying annually over six hundred thousand dollars in wages, and employing sixty-five salesmen who travel 24 states in the interest of Mayer shoes.

Frederick Mayer died on March 16, 1893, after building up a large and successful business. He is succeeded by his sons, George P. Mayer, Fred J. Mayer and Adam J. Mayer, who, by rigidly maintaining the policy of the founder, have succeeded in bringing the business up to its present magnitude, where it stands as a monument of German thrift and industry.

Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont, discussing in New York her book on the rearing of children, said:

"Children must be trained to be unselfish and tactful. Without this training the average child is as inconsiderate as a Dark Harbor fisherman the Maine folks tell about.

"This fisherman, walking along the road one day, saw a very ugly man sitting on a fence whittling a stick. He stopped and looked at the man for some time in disgusted silence. Then he said:

"'Well, you're ugly for fair.'

"'I can't help it, can I?' the ugly man asked, in a hurt tone.

"The fisherman thought a moment. Then he said, indignantly:

"'You could stay in the house, couldn't you?'"

A Literal Interpretation.

A traveler riding in a rather wild part of Scotland came to the edge of a morass.

Hailing a peasant lad who was not far away, he asked if the bog was hard at the bottom.

"Ay, quite hard," responded the youth.

So the traveler rode on, and presently his horse began to sink with alarming rapidity into the mire.

"You rascal!" he yelled to the grinning urchin. "You told me the bog was hard at the bottom."

"So it is," joyfully shouted the peasant, "but you're not there yet!"

OFFICIAL PAPER RED LAKE FALLS CITY

$1.50 Per Year in Advance

"Jake" has again found his voice, and he doesn't seem to care where the chips fall.

Mr. Pinchot has the satisfaction of feeling that if any firing must be done it is just as well to do it in the cold weather.

The anti-cannon cracker law went into affect last week in Nebraska. It's about time congress was giving the subject some attention, too.

A Kansas minister declares he just couldn't resist eloping with a sweet sixteen-year-old maiden, because she forced her attentions on him. At that no one heard him calling for the police.

If the president had to transmit his ideas as a long distance message it doubtless would be a much abbreviated affair. Either that, or at the rates charged in Minnesota the government would soon be bankrupt.

It will be hard to convince the average person that the state fair is not in politics. It will be a fortunate day for the fair and for the people when the political grafter and the office seeker are eliminated from its councils, and if they are not we may expect a gradual, but sure decline in the fair's popularity.

The Chicago News says that why so many worthy women love worthless men is a mystery. Perhaps it is for the same reason that worthy women stoop to bind up the wounds of a dog that has been injured, but there are also worthy men who are loving and caring for worthless women, although the proportion is not so large, for the simple reason that there are not so many worthless women as there are men.

Congressman Adair of Indiana made a speech in the House Tuesday, criticising in no uncertain terms the extravagance at the White House, and says that "with practically no expense, the president who would not save from an income of $50,000 a year a sufficient sum to live on at ease the balance of his life, in his judgement has not sufficient business capacity to direct the affairs of a great nation."

The total public benefactions in the United States during the last twelve months amounted to $141,250,000, an amount $40,000,000 greater than any previous year in the history of the country. The amount this year was more than twice as much as that given away last year. The principal benefactors in 1908 have been the late John S. Kennedy of New York, who gave away $26,500,500; John D. Rockefeller, $12,825,000, and Andrew Carnegie, whose donations amounted to $6,056,511.

Congressman Steenerson seems to be an insurgent on every occasion—except the occasions when his vote would be effective. Although an avowed insurgent, he voted for Cannon, and the other day on the first test of strength between Cannon and the insurgents he voted for Cannon. True, he voted against the Aldrich bill, but the chances are he knew his support was not needed, and something had to be done to pacify the folks at home. Mr. Steenerson's milk and water insurgency isn't the kind the Ninth district wants.

At a southern banquet recently, Mr. Bryan made the following very philosophical remarks:

"I tell people I never expect to be or never hope to be a candidate for president again. One reason for not wanting to be that Mr. Roosevelt took some of my policies and Mr. Taft is taking others. If I ran again they would raise the "third-term" cry on me, saying I had served two terms already. And why should a man have all the worry and all the annoyance of being president when he can get men to do the work for him, left free as I am to go around to meet friends on occasions of this kind and really enjoy life?"

The sightless eyes of Senator Gore of Oklahoma see further than the full-orbed vision of all the Cannon cohorts. In a recent speech at Danville, Ill., the home of Joe Cannon, he said:

"The tariff enables one man to get without earning what another man earns without getting. It ennobles the jeweled hand of greed to pick the threadbare pockets of the needy."

The time is not far distant when free trade will be openly and fearlessly pronounced as the salvation of the republic. Every day of Cannonism tolls the knell of high protection.

According to the calendar for 1910, Lent begins early in the new year. Ash Wednesday comes on February 9, which ushers in the dull period, and Easter falls on March 29, so it will be almost too cold for Easter bonnets. Washington's birthday will come on Thursday this year, so that all youngsters will be assured a vacation from school. Memorial day in 1910 falls on Monday, as does July 4th. And Labor day, always on Monday, will be September 5th. Thanksgiving always on Thursday, will be November 24th and Christmas the last and best will be on Sunday in 1910.

If anybody supposed that one defeat was going to cause a man with Jake Jacobson's square jaw and defiant eye to go 'way back and sit down they were mistaken, says the Hutchinson Leader. He is coming to the front now as the leader of the temperance forces in the Republican party and if there isn't in the next platform of that party a county option plank strong enough to bear the weight of public sentiment the big man from Lac qui Parle will know the reason why. The liquor interests, which were backing him in the last campaign will be bucking him in the next convention. Jacobson's inborn predilections are for prohibition and now that he is not out for office he is out for the satisfaction of airing his honest convictions.

Twenty years ago H. W. Grady of the Atlanta Constitution said he attended the funeral of a friend in Georgia. He traveled in cars built at Chicago and on a railroad the rails of which were made in Pittsburg. He rode in a carriage built in Wisconsin, behind horses raised in Illinois. The sexton dug with Buffalo shovels thru three feet of choice marble to make the grave, yet the marble slab erected thereon was made and engraved in Vermont. The coffin was made in Cincinnati of northern pine yet there were pine forests within a hundred feet of the grave. The coffin nails were made in Philadelphia, the shirt that covered the body of his friend was made in New York, his coat in Chicago, shoes in Boston. Georgia furnished nothing for the funeral but the corpse and the hole in the ground.

EXCHANGE ECHOES.

Cass Lake Times: An old gentleman who exercised his brain to untie political knots more than half a century ago remarked to us the other day that since the republic was organized that there is no longer any party cohesion; both political oranizations are but machines kept in commission for the sake of plunder, either fears the other for when pushed to the limit they combine to keep the party in power in control of the machinery that serves their purpose. No patriot can ally himself with either of the old parties because of their crimes and there are thousands of voters in every state of the Union who refuse to drag their good name in the filth of modern politics and remain at home on election day.

Montevideo Leader: It may be Eberhart or Jacobson or Dunn or some other in the convention and it may be neither in the election. A Republican nomination to the governorship has not been equivalent to an election for a number of years.

Hibbing Mesaba Ore: It should be enough for the common people of the state that Governor Eberhart has all of the remnants of the old Republican machine against him. It was this same machine that gave us Governor Johnson and if it can give us another governor half so good no matter what his political affiliation it will be a record that any machine might well retire on.

Foley Independent: Shades of Abraham Lincoln! Does President Taft think that he will have so many strings to his bow three years hence that he can afford to alienate Wisconsin by depriving Senator LaFollette of all consideration in the matter of patronage for the benefit of a self-confessed briber such as is Senator Stephenson.

Walker Pilot: Some of the state Democrats aver that one John Lind could whip the best Republican put up for gubernatorial honors with one hand.

Fairmont Sentinal: Outside of the papers owned or edited by federal officials we cannot call to mind a thick and thin partisan newspaper in all Minnesota.

Detroit Record: "I-told-you-so's" are now out in force knocking Dr. Fredrick A. Cook and his fake discovery of the frozen circle erroneously called the North Pole. Ah, well, Dr. Cook has only followed in the footsteps of other famous men in discovering the fickleness of public popularity a la Admiral Dewey and others.

Madison Independent Press: Taft wants the Sherman law amended. That law was on the statute books a great many years before anybody discovered that it really meant anything. Now that the halter begins to draw, those fellows who have their necks in the loop are beginning to squeal like the porkers that they are and an amendment is asked. The chances are that any amendment might so change the law as to allow the men for whom it was intended to make a safe getaway; therefore it may be best to let the law stand as it is.

Breckenridge Gazette: Good morning, have you heard the latest? It is stated on good authority that Governor Eberhart is at work rearranging the schedule of Halley's commet, and that hereafter its appearance will be annual and will mark the opening of the Minnesota state fair. Great is the power of a "pull."

is a wonderful food-medicine for all ages of mankind. It will make the delicate, sickly baby strong and well—will give the pale, anemic girl rosy cheeks and rich, red blood. Reflections of a Bachelor.

New York Press: Duty is a saddle that wears sores on one's back.

A man thinks he can control others when he can't control himself.

The less a man understands girls the more they make him think he does.

It's better to have a foolish belief that comforts you than to have a wise one that pains you.

Pointed Paragraphs.

Chicago News: You can't get fat on a chafing dish diet.

He who drifts with the tide is apt to go broke on the rocks.

Of course a guilty man never gets a fair trial—from his viewpoint.

Love makes a woman believe a lot of things that she knows are not true.

A man boasts of his past and the woman is proud if she hasn't any at all.

Don't be afraid to take a day off occasionally. It is necessary for good work.

Many a coming man fails to arrive because he got cold feet shortly after starting.

And woman might have had her rights long ago had she understood the manly art of grafting.

When a man is sick he expects the rest of the family to drop everything and listen to his grunts.

Somehow a girl doesn't imagine she is happy unless her love for some man is strong enough to make her miserable.

the abstracts of the bill and so amalgamated with it in the dispatches sent to the daily press as to make them appear a part of it are a series of sugar coated explanations well calculated to hypnotise people and to impress upon them the idea that ships can be paid large subsidies out of the national treasury without cost to the people. While that is the view impressed on the taxpayers the shipping trust itself is under no such delusions. This campaign has been on for years. It has been an expensive one. No one however realizes better than the trust managers that the prize is worth the price, and that the passage of the bill means to them the right to levy an annual tribute of millions to be collected from the tax payers of the nation by far the greater proportion of whom a ship subsidy cannot benefit in any conceivable way.

Senatorial Insurgents and Others.

It is understood that Senator Clapp while in Minnesota has recently assumed a pose antagonistic to a ship subsidy. He may get away with it as he got away with his pose of insurgency. These sudden conversions in view of a contested election are not uncommon and long ago Senator Clapp saw the cloud not bigger than a man's hand which is now darkening the horizon. Out of this emerged the form of Frank Kellogg in whom Senator Clapp recognizes already an opponent of whom he has good reasons to beware. For while Kellogg publicly disclaims an active candidacy it is well known that for months his friends have been laying wires which it is hoped may ultimately land him in an easy chair in the United States senate. Senator Clapp sees the danger; hence his loud professions of devotion to popular measures.

A Poor Choice.

The people of this state may have to choose between Kellogg and Clapp. As between them it is however a battle of the trusts. Corporate interests were responsible for Clapp's elevation in the first place. He had their backing. To it he owed his strength. Between him and them there has always been mutual understanding. It is only a short time ago that Senator LaFollette brought Senator Clapp face to face before Minnesota audiences with his corporation record and produced from public documents the proof of his service. Mr. Kellogg's professional corporation affiliations are well known. There is no need to enlarge on the fact that for years he has been attorney of the steel trust and the confidential adviser of the railroads in their protest against government operation and authority. If on the one hand Clapp now is able to play his insurgency to increase his popularity on the other Kellogg bears upon his shield the record of the greatest victory ever attained against the greatest the most oppressive and the most obnoxious of corporate malefactors. It's a sorry choice— a gamble so far as the people are concerned either way when a selection has to be made between men of such antecedents. May we not indulge the hope that in the battle of conflicting interests the people may find the way out in the selection of a representative man of high character who has a clear record and who acknowledges no ulterior allegiance which will operate to prevent faithful and disinterested service.

Plain Profession.

When Governor Eberhart entered upon the discharge of the duties of the office to which life's uncertainties unexpectedly elected him, he was loud in profession of an unalterable design to carry out the policies of his distinguished predecessor. Within the past few weeks the sincerity of these professions of disinterested service have been put to test. How hollow they were the event has shown. By the lapse of terms of offices and otherwise a number of positions have become vacant. In no cases has a single one of them been filled as Governor Johnson would have filled them. At the head of the game and fish commission was a personal friend of Governor Johnson, a man who was distinguished by his confidence and who justified that confidence by a zeal for the public service rare enough in public men and by conducting his department with a view single to the duties he was called upon to discarge. He was ruthlessly turned out by Eberhart and his place filled by the appointment of a gentleman who, however worthy he may be otherwise he recommended himself to the governor because he could be made useful as part of the administration's political machine. When a secretary had to be appointed to a visiting board professedly non political the governor's choice was the son-in-law of perhaps Governor Johnson's bitterest political opponent in the state—himself unfriendly to the governor and the publicity agent of those who sought to compass his defeat. It was the same way on other boards. Governor Johnson's friends in every case were marked men. Their successors were selected from Republicans who are a part of the Republican oranization of which Governor Eberhart hopes to continue to redeem the pledge solemnly and voluntarily made to carry out Governor Johnson's policies.

A Short Story.

I think I have room for another paragraph this time on a different subject. It has to do with the regard in which President Tatf is held by the average man. We have among the theaters here one attended principally by men only. They go there because it's free and easy. They don't have to dress up and they can sit and smoke if they feel so inclined. Then there is an occasional wrestling bout or a sparring match. I haven't any doubt that its audience is better representative of the average voter than that of either the Metropolitan, the Grand or the Orpheum. The other night pictures of representative men were flashed on the curtain. First there was Grant. It was greeted with a salvo of applause. Next came Lincoln. The applause grew. Then came Roosevelt. The cheering was still more enthusiastic. Then Johnson's picture was flashed; the audience turned itself loose. Last of all came Taft; silence and back in the corners a hiss.

S.S.S. PURELY VEGETABLE

It is a generally recognized fact that medicines taken from the botanical kingdom are better adapted to the delicate human system, and safer in every way, than those composed of strong mineral mixtures.

In the early settlement of this land, our forefathers were obliged to procure their medicines from Nature's great laboratories of forest and field. They searched out and compounded the different vegetable materials into teas, concoctions and medicines. That these pioneers found the most potent and valuable of the roots, herbs and barks placed at their disposal, is abundantly proven by the fact that the great majority of them were blessed with rugged health. They cured their diseases and were enabled to do the great preliminary work of civilization because the remedies they used were Nature's remedies, and specially adapted to the needs of humanity.

Among the very best of these vegetable preparations is S. S. S., a medicine made entirely of roots, herbs and barks in such combination as to make it the greatest of all blood purifiers and the finest of all tonics. S. S. S. does not contain the least particle of mineral in any form, and is absolutely a safe medicine for any one to use.

CHEMIST FOUND S.S.S. FREE FROM MINERALS.

A few years ago I was taken with Inflammatory Rheumatism. Upon the advice of a friend I decided to try S.S.S. Before allowing me to take it, however, my guardian, who was a chemist, analyzed the remedy, and pronounced it free from potash or mercury. I continued the remedy, and in two months I was cured completely. The cure was permanent, for I have never since had a touch of Rheumatism, though many times exposed to damp and cold weather.

MRS. ELEANOR E. JONES.
25 Cliff St., Roxbury, Mass.

While purifying the blood this great vegetable remedy builds up and strengthens every portion of the system. S.S.S. cures Rheumatism, Catarrh, Sores and Ulcers, Malaria, Scrofula, Skin Diseases, Contagious Blood Poison, hereditary taints, and all other diseases and disorders caused by impure or polluted blood.

As a tonic S. S. S. is unequalled. It invigorates every portion of the system, and the healthy blood it creates largely assists in overcoming any derangement of the digestive system. If you are suffering from any blood trouble, or need a tonic to build up your constitution, you could not do better than to take S. S. S., a medicine that is in no degree harmful. Book on the blood and any medical advice free.

It isn't so difficult to strengthen a weak stomach if one goes at it correctly. And this is true of the Heart and Kidneys. The old fashioned way of dosing the stomach or stimulating the Heart or Kidneys is surely wrong! Dr. Shoop first pointed out this error. "Go to the weak or ailing nerves of these organs," said he. Each inside organ has its controlling or "inside nerve." When these nerves fail them then those organs must surely falter. This vital truth is leading druggists everywhere to dispense and recommend Dr. Shoop's Restorative. A few days test will surely tell! Sold by all dealers.

HIS CONVERSION.

A Man Who Did Not Believe In Woman's Standard of Honor.

By KINGSBURY WELCH.

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

"Girls," said Miss Spencer at afternoon tea, "what do you suppose I've heard about Harrington? He has openly avowed himself a woman hater. Let's cut him."

"Let's," said Miss Hunter.

"Let's," said every girl in the room but one.

"Are you sure you'll all keep to the agreement?" asked Miss Emerson incredulously.

"What do you take us for?" said Miss Hunter. "You're as bad as Harrington."

"Well, I'll agree," drawled Miss Emerson, "but I don't want any shirking."

"All who agree," said Miss Spencer, "hold up a hand."

Every girl except one held up a lily white hand, with some sort of bangle or bracelet dangling at the wrist. The exception was Miss Emerson.

"Aren't you with us, Emmy?"

"No."

"Why not?"

"I don't believe in judging any one unheard, and I don't believe in conspiracies."

"Very well; do as you please."

That Miss Spencer was determined to keep faith in the matter is proved by the fact that she did not wait for an accidental meeting with the tabooed man. She brought about one the next day. Harrington was accustomed to walk past her home every morning on his way to his office. She had often stood at a front window purposely to get a bow from him, but after the first he did not deign to see her there. On the morning after he had been boycotted Miss Spencer went out on the street a short time before his accustomed passing, met him face to face and cut him dead.

HE WAS OBLIGED TO CATCH HER TO PREVENT HER FALLING.

The next morning Harrington walked by the house as indifferently as before. Miss Spencer was watching for him from behind a curtain. For three successive mornings she was at her post and saw the same indifference. Then she wrote a note to Mr. Harrington telling him that she had declined to speak to him because she had heard something about him to his discredit. If he would call on her she would tell him; she didn't wish to do him an injustice.

Harrington called the same evening. Miss Spencer wore her most becoming costume. She was a pretty girl and had never looked prettier. There was no convenient place for him to sit except near her on the sofa. She told him that some one had maligned him; had said he hated women. He replied that he was not in a position to deny the charge, for he had made such a remark a number of times.

"But you didn't mean it," she said. "Don't say you did, for I know you are a gentleman, and none such would attack the weaker sex."

Harrington saw a pair of beautiful blue eyes looking into his. He felt complimented, and he felt drawn toward Miss Spencer.

"The reason why I condemn women," he said, "is because of their standard of honor, which is far beneath that in vogue among men. But I am open to conviction. If within three months you are able to convince me that women are as honorable as men I will renounce my opposition. Meanwhile I shall see you frequently, and we will go out together."

"Agreed," said Miss Spencer.

Harrington kept his word. He called often and invited her to go out with him. She declined his invitations for places of amusement for fear she would be seen by some of the girls with whom she had made the compact. She knew very well what she would say to them when the time came to say it, but the time had not come.

One day Harrington was about to get off a trolley car. A young lady on the platform blocked his way. She was about to step down into the street when Harrington put a hand on her shoulder and held her back. A second later an automobile driven by a drunken chauffeur grazed the trolley car. Had the girl stepped off, as she intended, she would have surely been killed. The auto having passed, Harrington escorted her to the sidewalk. She seemed quite unconcerned till she reached it, then was all of a tremor. He was obliged to catch her to prevent her falling.

Harrington called a carriage and took her home. Before his departure from her house she had quite recovered and asked him for his address that she might send him some more formal acknowledgment of the obligation than verbal thanks. He gave her his card, at which she stared, stammered something, then bade him good day. She sent him a token of her gratitude—a dozen exquisite handkerchiefs with his initials embroidered in the corner by her own hands.

At the time [illegible] episode [illegible] allotted for his conversion under Miss Spencer's influence and had quite lost his antipathy for women. Indeed, he was beginning to feel that with her for a helpmeet life would assume a rosier hue. He had about made up his mind to tell her so when the trolley car incident occurred. But suddenly Miss Spencer noticed that he was becoming indifferent to her.

The truth is that, being on excellent terms with two women, he was enabled to contrast the one with the other. His trolley car lady appeared friendly, but otherwise indifferent. This revealed to him the fact that Miss Spencer was trying to catch him. The latter redoubled her efforts, but this only tended to make them more apparent and rendered him more appreciative of the girl whom it piqued him to believe felt for him only a natural gratitude for having been the accidental cause of saving her life.

And so it happened that the man who had given a woman an opportunity to prove to him that woman's standard of honor was equal to that of man found himself in an equivocal position. He had gone so far with Miss Spencer that he doubted if he were not in honor bound to go further. At any rate, he shrank from what he considered a backing out. When the end of the three months he had given Miss Spencer to convert him came round she had made the conversion, but he had fallen in love with another girl.

Harrington decided to make a clean breast of it to the girl he loved. He told her that he loved her, but before meeting her had become entangled with another girl. Then he confided to her his affair with Miss Spencer. His confidante manifested no surprise. Indeed, she seemed to be cognizant of the whole affair. But she astonished Mr. Harrington by telling him that she could not accept a proposition from him because such a course would place her in an unfortunate position. When he asked her what that position was she declined to inform him on the ground that she could not honorably do so.

Mr. Harrington was astonished. That a woman should decline an offer of marriage on the ground that it would place her in a false position and decline to give that position through motives of honor opened up to him a new thing in the world of morals. He had not been insensible to woman's charms, which he had considered marred by their want of a high sense of honor. Here was a woman with charms and scrupulously honorable. He begged her to put him in the way to get the desired information from another, but she said that such a course would be only a subterfuge and no more honorable than telling him herself.

Nevertheless the information came. Miss Spencer was met one day by Miss Hunter walking with Mr. Harrington, and, looking up at him in the fashion of a woman who means to be seductive, Miss Hunter at once invited the members of the cabal to meet at her house the next day at afternoon tea. Miss Emerson, having declined to cut the victim, was not notified. When they were assembled the hostess announced the perfidy of Miss Spencer.

Great was the indignation of the "signatory powers." Miss Wadsworth declared that Mr. Harrington should be saved from the wiles of such a girl, and after much deliberation it was decided to send him an anonymous note stating that for the protection of the sex certain girls had decided to cut him, Miss Spencer having made the proposition. The decision had been unanimous except for one girl. The note having been mailed and tea having been drunk, the girls separated.

When Harrington received the note he took it at once to Miss Spencer, telling her his opinion of women who could write such a note. Miss Spencer showed unmistakable signs of guilt and finally in tears confessed her part in the matter.

"Will you inform me," asked Harrington, "who was the girl who declined to enter upon this conspiracy?"

"Irene Emerson," sobbed the culprit.

"Irene Emerson!"

"Yes. Do you know her?"

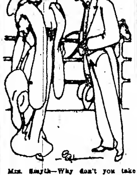
"I didn't when this boycott was decided on. I had never seen her. Since then it has been my good fortune to have been the accidental cause of her avoiding a serious accident, and in that way I made her acquaintance. I have been converted to the fact that a standard of honor may be lived up to by persons irrespective of sex, but I regret to have to tell you that my conversion has not come through you, but the girl who, though she had never seen me, declined to join the conspiracy that you instituted. I beg to bid you good day."

Mr. Harrington called on Miss Emerson as soon as he could reach her after leaving Miss Spencer.

"The secret you were too honorable to betray," he said, "has been revealed to me. I have come to thank you for the noble part you have played and for re-establishing in me that reverence for women which all true women deserve."

There are men friends of Harrington—crusty old bachelors—who are mean enough to insinuate that Miss Emerson played a deep game.

A Dangerous Place.



Mrs. Smyth—Why don't you take your wife to the horse show? It doesn't cost much.

Mr. Swift—Doesn't it? The last time I took her there she picked out the swellest gown she could find and made me buy her one just like it.

The Misses Fletcher, Brady, Lundquist and Anderson arrived from Red Lake Falls Friday to spend the day at the home of H. C. Hanson and family.

Ben Hoff came down from Middle River Friday to visit at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Martin Hoff. He expects to return in a few days to his home at Adams, N. D.

C W. Hooper, proprietor of the St. Hilaire Telephone exchange, reports that the work of extending the line from this village into the township of Bray is progressing satisfactorily. Poles were set for a distance of five miles last week, and the work of stretching the wires will soon begin.

The alarming increase in the number of Democrats in St. Hilaire is becoming a matter of grave concern to all disciples of good government. The fourth of a series which can some day exercise their elective franchise arrived at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Fred W. Buese, Tuesday morning. He is a lusty youngster and bears every evidence that he will be on deck 21 years from now to vote for the Hon. William Jennings Bryan on a 16 to-1, anti-imperialism, anti-booze, free trade, and three-star-Hennesey platform.

The old fashioned way of dosing a weak stomach, or stimulating the Heart or Kidneys is all wrong. Dr. Shoop first pointed out this error. This is why his prescription—Dr. Shoop's Restorative—is directed entirely to the cause of these ailments—the weak inside or controlling nerves. It isn't so difficult, says Dr. Shoop, to strengthen a weak Stomach, Heart or Kidneys, if one goes at it correctly. Each inside organ has its controlling or inside nerve. When these nerves fail, then those organs must surely falter. These vital truths are leading druggists everywhere to dispense and recommend Dr. Shoop's Restorative. Test it a few days, and see! Improvement will promptly and surely follow. Sold by all dealers.

AN EVENT of so much importance that in the future it may be looked back upon as a milestone marking the beginning of a new era in the progress of the southwest was the first Navajo fair, which was held at Shiprock Agency, New Mexico, recently.

At Shiprock the past six years has been a period of preparation, a struggle for a position of advantage from which the ignorance and superstition of a barbarous people might be attacked and the influences which have fettered them might be obliterated, so that, freed from its bondage, the Navajo race might take its place among the useful and beneficial elements of the nation, contributing its share toward the industry and enjoying its proportion of the advantages embraced in the common stock.

How successful this preparation for and beginning of their civilization has been is soon apparent to the observer who visits Shiprock, becomes acquainted with the superintendent and his assistants and realizes what they are achieving.

How important the civilization of the Navajo is to that section of the country is also apparent when it is considered that there are some 30,000 of them scattered over a reservation in New Mexico, Arizona and Utah, which contains a larger area than all the New England states and includes thousands of acres of fine agricultural, mineral and timber lands, and is almost completely underlaid with coal. The increase of their productiveness means an increase in the output of the southwest. Their education and permanent settlement upon small homesteads will leave a large surplus of land to be sold to white settlers. Thus the work being carried on at Shiprock has many points which commend it to the people who are interested in the development of that section.

The holding of a fair this fall was not decided upon until about two weeks before it was held, and when the decision was reached it was so late in the season that it was necessary to arrange for it at once, thus less than two weeks' notice was given the Navajos by means of Indian police and messengers—barely time to gather up what they had on hand and bring it in without any preparation or opportunity to gather or make anything especially for exhibition.

Under these circumstances the amount and quality of the exhibits displayed was no less than remarkable. The extent to which they responded to the call to bring in their products was a surprise to Major Shelton, the Indian agent for this reservation, himself. He knew that they could and would make a very creditable showing.

Two hundred and ninety general exhibits were received and displayed, while several others arrived too late to be accepted. These exhibits contained from five to 60 articles each. Agricultural products formed the chief part of the exhibition, but by no means all, as the famous Navajo blanket was there in many styles and sizes, beautiful silver jewelry of various and unique designs, old blankets of great value, a few buffalo robes, valuable pieces of bead work and dozens of other products and curios, ancient and modern. Besides these general exhibits there was the live stock show, in which horses, milch cows, sheep and goats were numerous.

The sports consisted of foot races (the longest one five and one-half miles, in which 12 entered and four finished), horse races, games and amusements. Each evening the Navajos provided their own amusement by participating in several of their ancient sacred dances, which were both interesting and entertaining to the visitors.

As an example of how a list of prize winners at an Indian fair would read, the following extracts are given:

General exhibit of farm and garden products—First prize, double harness, Barber-bit-cil-ly (the latter is the winner's name); second, disk barrow, Happy Jack; third, cultivator, Be-kio-e-be-gay; fourth, shovel, Do-he-bit-see.

Native blanket, all wool—First, cook stove, Kin-le-che-ne; second, 100 pounds flour, Lenno Oliver; third, 50 pounds flour, Be-ka-da-na-be-ga; fourth, 25 pounds flour, Pel-e-can-e-es-klo-e.

Cleanest Navajo baby—First, 50 pounds flour, Lenna Oliver; second, 25 pounds flour, Hostoo-ot-so-se.

The Navajo blanket collection, like all other exhibits, was a fine one. It contained a few of the old-time bayetas, for which the Navajos first became famous. These were originally made from the yarn obtained by unraveling woolen cloth and re-weaving it into a very fine, close, tight blanket. There were also many fine chief's blankets, the famous blanket with the black-and-white cross stripes which were used by those Navajos who could afford them long before a white man ever saw them. But best and greatest of all was the fine collection of soft gray and black rugs made from the natural colors of wool without any dye whatever and the beautiful outline blankets, in which the Navajo has reached the highest perfection of the art. These blankets were judged by Frank Staplin, a Navajo blanket expert of Farmington, N. M., J. L. Parsons of Durango and Miss Emma Loomis, of the agency, and the first prize was awarded to a beautiful black, white and grey blanket of artistic design and remarkably even and close weave, shown in the center picture.

The Navajo silver jewelry is hand-hammered from Mexican dollars, which the traders procure for the Navajos, and many of the pieces are very beautiful in design and odd and exquisite as an ornament. The jewelry consists of rings, bracelets, neck chains, charms and many other articles.

It should be remembered that none of the products raised at Shiprock under the supervision of the superintendent and employes were permitted to participate for prizes, but every prize went to reservation Navajos for products purely their own. The vegetables and other agricultural products of the agency are, however, worthy of special mention, as they formed a fine exhibit in themselves and included, besides the ordinary products of the section, many of the new vegetables brought from foreign lands by representatives of the department of agriculture.

Some of the Indian exhibits were brought no less than 70 miles in wagons and on horseback, by the interested owners, and one lot of 50 general exhibits, which deserves special mention, came from So-Noos-Tee, the vicinity of F. L. Noel's trading post. This lot contained the prize-winning assortment of silver work and other prize winners.

The success of the first Navajo fair, which the unappreciative neighboring public had supposed would consist of a few pony races and chicken fights, but which turned out to be an exhibit of agricultural products which probably equaled any other ever made in the county, for quality, and contained at least five times the quantity, is due entirely to the work of Major W. T. Shelton, the superintendent at Shiprock. It is true the Navajos were producing most of these articles long before they ever saw or heard of Shelton, but they were not producing as much, as well, nor as fine a quality as they have been since coming into contact with the influence of the institution which he has founded. Neither could they have been induced to have brought together their most valuable and cherished personal effects for public inspection but for the confidence which this agency has awakened within them.

We have therefore seen the first beneficial effects of education and proper example upon this neglected people. The changes which have been wrought upon those coming in contact with this institution have been so rapid and sweeping that it challenges credulity. The difference between them and the Navajos on some other parts of the reservation is so marked that they would not be taken for the same people, and it is these differences that commend the policies and practices initiated by Mr. Shelton at this institution and places it in favorable contrast with other government and private Indian schools.

CUSTOMS MEN PUZZLED

It took five men and three women at the custom house and the silk buyer of a Louisville department store to fix the value of a kimono which arrived at the office of the surveyor of customs for appraisement.

It was a dainty silken thing, lavender in color, which lay on the table of Cashier Thomas for two hours. The garment was sent to the custom house by the postmaster at Somerset, Ky., who received it a few days ago through the mail from Japan. He did not send in the address of the owner.

This was aggravating to the young women experts called in. "I know every woman in Somerset," one said, "and I'd just like to know who is going to wear that."

For half an hour it puzzled Surveyor Taylor and two or three of his men assistants to discover just what the garment was.

"It looks to me like the court gown of the queen of Zanzibar," said Clay Miller, who measures steamboats and superintends the loading of merchandise at the custom house depot.

"Don't you men know anything at all?" exclaimed one of the women clerks, pushing her way through the puzzled group. "Why, it's a kimono."

"What in thunder is a kimono?" inquired Deputy Sam Barber. "They don't have that kind of thing down in Bath county, where I come from."

Finally, when the officials decided that there was nothing dangerous about the garment, they started in fixing the value. It was estimated to be worth all the way from $1.50 to $150. The kimono was finally carried to a department store, where the silk buyer said it was worth $14.

Later the kimono was bundled into a box and started back to the Somerset postmaster, with instructions to charge the owner $8.20 duty.—Louisville Times.

CHAINED TO WHEELBARROW

In writing of the Schlusselburg prison in McClure's, David Soskice tells of a prisoner who was chained to a wheelbarrow:

"Schedrin had been condemned to hard labor in the convict mines of Siberia and for an attempt to escape from there had been sentenced to be chained to a heavy wheelbarrow. When the order came for his transfer from Siberia to St. Petersburg, no conveyance could be found large enough to contain him, the wheelbarrow and the convoy of gendarmes. Yet, as the wheelbarrow had become a part of the prisoner, the gendarmes were afraid to leave it behind. It was therefore decided to place Schedrin with his convoy in one cart and the wheelbarrow behind in another. For several months, day and night, Schedrin and the gendarmes galloped through Siberia on a troika (a three-horsed cart or sledge), while another sped behind them, upon which the wheelbarrow reposed—causing the deepest amazement among the peasants in the villages through which they passed. Upon the arrival of the prisoner in SS. Peter and Paul he was once again chained to the barrow, and only after he had been six weeks in the Schlusselburg was he finally detached from it and given freedom of movement within the narrow confines of his cell.

"'When they unchained me,' said Schedrin subsequently, 'I could not get enough movement. I wanted to run and run, and it seemed to me that I could never stop. How strange it is that men who can enjoy perfect freedom of movement never realize the wonderful happiness that is theirs!'"

A SLAP AT OUR SENATE

One of the friends of Representative Martin of South Dakota was making a strenuous complaint to Mr. Martin about the manner in which committee assignments were given in the senate.

"A new senator, however able he may be, has no chance," said Mr. Martin's friend, "but if he's a thousand years old he can get the best committee job."

"That reminds me," said the South Dakota member, "of what Seth Bullock remarked to me when I took him over to the senate one time. After looking them over, Seth said: 'Gee, Martin! That looks like a soldiers' home in there.'"—Rochester Herald.

CHINESE GIRL IN AMERICA

A snap-shot of Miss Wu Ting Fang, taken while she was motoring recently, shows the young lady dressed quite in the style of the American girl, and apparently the same acute interest in the pleasant sport that her girl friends in Washington might feel. After all, it will be the women who will finally break down all barriers and make the whole world more nearly akin.

Treadmill Justice

In one of the fairly recent volumes of the New York Court of Appeals Reports is contained the last chapter of a famous and extraordinary case, which is a gross illustration of this interminableness and an extreme though characteristic example of its results. The court record of the last chapter of this law suit is curt and obscure; hardly what one might expect for an extraordinary case. It consists of eight words: "Judgment and order affirmed with costs. No opinion." These eight words mark the close of a simple accident case involving no difficult questions of law, which had been in the courts continuously for 22 years.

It had been tried before juries seven times. It had been argued in appellate courts 10 times. The final bill of costs in the case, not including lawyers' charges or the cost of printing seven different volumes of testimony, each of from two to three hundred pages, as required in the appellate courts on the various appeals, and not including any of the defendant's expenses whatever, is over $20,000. A conservative estimate of the expense of this litigation not including lawyers' fees probably would be $5,000.—George W. Adams in Atlantic.

In a number of the larger cities there has been noticed that there is a greatly increased number of sewer explosions, and this has been attributed to the custom followed in garages of emptying gasoline into the sewers. It is explained that the vapor of the gasoline collects at favorable points and is exploded by the heat naturally generated in these places. A technical paper of New York calls attention to this dangerous condition and suggests that some measure be taken to prevent it.

Something for Our Invalid.

There is nothing like grape juice for a refreshing drink. Use one-third grape juice and add water to fill the glass two-thirds full. It is said to build up the blood especially the corpuscles.

A dainty way of serving an egg to change the monotony of a poached egg. Toast a circular piece of toast dip in salted water; butter, then heap on it the white of egg beaten stiff and salted, then drop in the yolk and set in the oven until a delicate brown.

A nourishing drink given when liquid food is the only food taken is egg nog. Beat an egg separating the white and yolk, add sugar and nutmeg to the yolk, a little rich milk or cream, then stir in the beaten white and a dash of salt. Serve very cold.

A very dainty salad that may be eaten by an invalid is made of grapes (the Californian variety), remove the skin and seeds, add an equal quantity of chopped celery and use the following dressing.

Household Hints.

A scant half cupful of strained tomatoes placed in the pan where lamb or mutton is roasting, greatly improves the flavor of the meat. The tomato mixes with the gravy and is used in the basting.

Chop the cold lamb roast, and make into croquettes. Season with a little parboiled, chopped green pepper. Serve garnished with peas.

Sugar doughnuts by putting powdered sugar in a paper bag and shaking one doughnut at a time in it until it is well coated.

When frosting will not harden slip the cake into the oven for a minute. It will be hard on the outside and creamy underneath.

Cider Jelly.

Soak three-fourths of a teaspoonful of gelatine in one-half of a tablespoon of cold water, then add one and one-half tablespoonfuls of boiling water, one-half cupful of cider and sugar to taste, stir until the gelatine is well dissolved, mold and chill.

DEAR to me ever is the twilight hour,
When shadows deepen and the day is spent
Then sorrow and care seem to lose their power
And over my soul comes a sweet content."

Nuts.

We have come to the time when we recognize the value of nuts as a food. The reason many people find them hard of digestion is because they are not sufficiently divided in the mouth. Nuts need a thorough mastication. The pecan is a nut which is a general favorite and has been found to acclimate itself to many parts of the United States hitherto thought too severe in climate.

A cupful of walnuts added to entire wheat bread makes a most nutritious loaf. Then one may prepare a nut loaf that will take the place of meat. Use one pint of bread crumbs, one and one-half cupfuls of ground nutmeats, salt, sage, two tablespoonfuls of butter, one beaten egg and sufficient boiling water to moisten. Form into a loaf and bake in a moderate oven.

An unusual salad but a most appetizing one is made of two cupfuls of grated cocoanut (if dessicated, wash out the sugar), two tart apples, one-half cupful of celery, two tablespoonfuls of chopped onion, one tablespoonful of chopped parsley, a bit of chopped red pepper, cut in strips with the shears. Serve with French dressing, three tablespoonfuls of oil to one of vinegar, red pepper and salt to taste.

Nut Mince Pie.

Take one cupful of walnut meats chopped fine, two cupfuls of chopped apple, one cupful of raisins, one and one-half cups of sugar mixed with one teaspoonful each of cinnamon and allspice, one-half a teaspoonful each of cloves and salt, one-half cupful of vinegar and one-half cupful of grape juice or any fruit juice. Mix well. This quantity will make two or three pies.

Giblet Sauce.

Chop the chicken giblets after cooking slowly until tender; add a little onion juice, thicken with four tablespoonfuls of chicken fat and the same amount of flour, browned together. Add a teaspoonful of worcestershire sauce and serve.

For the Mother.

If a child be taught nothing else about the use of its body it should at least be taught poise in standing, walking and sitting, and correct poise is merely a matter of getting the weight on the balls of the feet and raising the chest. Even young children throw their weight on the heels, and that this eventually becomes a habit may be seen by observing men and women upon the streets.

Zwieback.

Take bread sponge enough for three loaves of bread, add three well-beaten eggs, one cup of sugar, one cup of melted butter and flour enough to mold into a large loaf. Let rise, the second time make into large biscuit, let rise and bake. When cool cut into four slices and brown in a hot oven. This will keep a long time in paper bags.

SKIN HUMOR 25 YEARS

"Cuticura did wonders for me. For twenty-five years I suffered agony from a terrible humor, completely covering my head, neck and shoulders, so even to my wife, I became an object of dread. At large expense I consulted the most able doctors far and near. Their treatment was of no avail, nor was that of the —— Hospital, during six months' efforts. I suffered on and concluded there was no help for me this side of the grave. Then I heard of some one who had been cured by Cuticura Remedies and thought that a trial could do no harm. In a surprisingly short time I was completely cured. S. P. Keyes, 147 Congress St., Boston, Mass., Oct. 12, '09."

"I congratulate Cuticura upon my speedy recovery from pimples which covered my face. I used Cuticura Soap, Ointment and Resolvent for ten days and my face cleared and I am perfectly well. I had tried doctors for several months but got no results. Wm. J. Sadlier, 1614 Susquehanna Ave., Philadelphia, May 1, 1909."

A Sale, a Sale!

The little old English flower woman came into the wine merchant's and brought her flowers to the table. A strange guest of the wine merchant's bought a bunch of them for the two women who dined there.

"Did you see what she made him pay for those flowers?" whispered one of them to the other. "Fifty cents!"

"I'm glad of it," the other whispered, back. "I've been living in this neighborhood for three years and it's the first time I ever saw anybody buy a single bunch of those flowers of hers."—New York Press.

BAKING ECONOMY

By the use of perfect baking powder the housewife can derive as much economy as from any other article used in baking and cooking. In selecting a baking powder, therefore, care should be exercised to purchase one that retains its original strength and always remains the same, thus making the food sweet and wholesome and producing sufficient leavening gas to make the baking light.

Very little of this leavening gas is produced by the cheap baking powders, making it necessary to use double the quantity ordinarily required to secure good results.

In using Calumet Baking Powder you are bound to have uniform bread, cake or biscuits, as Calumet does not contain any cheap, useless or adulterating ingredients so commonly used to increase the weight. Further, it produces pure, wholesome food and is a baking powder of rare merit; therefore, is recommended by leading physicians and chemists. It complies with all pure food laws, both STATE and NATIONAL. The goods are moderate in price, and any lady purchasing Calumet from her grocer, if not satisfied with it can return it and have her money refunded.

Told in the Doctor's.

Dr. Arthur T. Halbrook is credited with the following:

A man by the name of Evans died and went to heaven. When he arrived at the pearly gates he said to St. Peter:

"Well, I'm here."

St. Peter asked his name. "John Evans," was the reply.

St. Peter looked through the book and shook his head.

"You don't belong here," he said.

"But I am sure I belong here," said the man.

"Wait a minute," said Peter. He looked again, and in a back part of the book found a name.

"Sure," said the guardian of the gate, "you belong here, but you weren't expected for 20 years. Who's your doctor?"—American Druggist.

An Artistic Rebuke.

A well-known clergyman was traveling in a non-smoking compartment of a train going north. As soon as the train was well on its way, the only other occupant, without asking permission of his fellow traveler, coolly lit a cigarette. The reverend gentleman was relieved, as he wanted to smoke himself, but had been afraid lest his companion might object. But the opportunity was too good to be lost. Drawing out his pipe he leaned forward, and, with an ingratiating smile, blandly inquired: "Would you object if I were to smoke?"

DEVELOPMENT OF CENTRAL CANADA

THE STORY OF BIG YIELDS OF GRAIN COMES FROM EVERY SECTION.

When the man in the States was told that he could get 160 acres of land in Central Canada—comprising the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta—that under cultivation would produce from 20 to 30 bushels of wheat to the acre, or if seeded to oats the yield would be 40 to 60 bushels, he was skeptical. The same story was told the man who wished to get nearer to existing lines of railway, and was only asked to pay $10 to $12 an acre. But many tried it, some one plan and some another. The man who accepted the 160 acres as a free gift, as a homestead, and was willing to put in the required residence duties of three years has now a farm worth from fifteen to twenty dollars an acre. The man who chose to purchase, and did so, took up his residence just the same. He has land, that, in many cases, is worth twice the money he paid for it. Both have found that the story of splendid yields was verified. They have had crops exceeding that promised; they have seen oats that yielded 100 bushels to the acre, and have grown wheat that averaged 40 and as high as 50 bushels to the acre. Their wheat was not a 57 lb. to the bushel article but 62 and 63 lbs. They have seen within the past year or two trunk lines of railway constructed through their district, and throwing out branch lines to the gates of their farm. They have seen schools established in their neighbourhood and the Government contributing largely to their expense. Churches have been erected, villages have been established, towns have sprung into existence and cities are rapidly springing up, as if the magic hand of some unseen conjurer was at work. But it was not; it was the legitimate offering of the wealth of the field which made all these things come about, naturally, and easy. The prairie that three years ago was merely prairie, a patch of brown, just waiting for the ploughman, is to-day dotted with tilled farms and splendid homes. The line of elevators with their glistening metalled fireproof sides and roofs, indicate the location of the town and the railroad. There is the glow of newness about it all, but the elevator, the splendid store buildings and the comfortable hostelries denote wealth, beyond that of the strength of the man who fashioned and built them but the wealth of the soil, which means that the newness will be followed by a steady growth. The writer recently was a passenger over the Grand Trunk Pacific, the latest factor in this great marvelous field of development. The rapidity with which towns were being built up, the farmsteads occupied, was something even his experienced eye had not looked for. Everywhere along the line of this new transcontinental was the distinguishing mark of progress. There was not a mile of the length of the road from Winnipeg to Edmonton and west that did not bear token of its ability to pay tribute to the revenue of the road. Mention is made of this line, not because it is the last in the field, but because it is one of the best built roads on the Continent and traverses one of the best districts of an excellent country. It is well operated, and already has gone into active service as another means of making it possible to secure more speedily transit from the grain fields to the shipping centres. It had been the intention in this article to have spoken of some of the yields of grain that have made the farmers of Central Canada contented this year, but space will not permit, so that delightful task will be taken up in another issue. In the meantime it would be well for the reader, if he is interested, to put himself in touch with some official of the Canadian Government and get information that might be useful in making a selection for a home in Central Canada, and become one of those who will be instrumental in building up a great country to the north. In doing so, you will be assisting the United States. In a few years' time the United States will be a wheat importer. Canada will supply the wheat and you will be one of the producers.

Friendly Birds.

Most of the birds and mammals have the fear of man in their hearts, and are difficult to approach, but others show no great concern. The Alaskan jays, for instance, are devoted camp followers. "They proved useful as scavengers," says Mr. Osgood, "and cooked oatmeal seemed to attract them even more than raw meat. They many times hopped about the campfire, or perched on the tent poles and ropes. Their harsh chattering was not always pleasant, but was somewhat atoned for by their less frequent soft whistle and their pert and confident ways, so on the whole their presence was welcomed."

Ship's Figurehead.

Carvings for more than 500 vessels were made by William Southworth, who recently died at Bath. He made a specialty of the carving of figureheads for many years, and some splendid ones were the product of his skill. The rise of commercialism has blotted out the poetic significance of the figurehead and few figureheads are seen nowadays.—Kennebec Journal.

MORGAN IS BALKED

Finds One Thing His Millions Can't Purchase.

Wants the Famous Reggia Castle at Mantua, But the Italian Government Refuses His Offer of $5,000,000.

New York.—J. Pierpont Morgan, multi-millionaire banker can buy insurance companies if he wants them, but he has found one thing on the globe that his great fortune will not bring to him.

Morgan's greatest artistic yearning was to buy the Reggia at Mantua, formerly known as the Corte Reale, one of the most famous royal residences in Europe.

Mr. Morgan offered $5,000,000 for this magnificent and ancient structure, it is reported—a fabulous fortune in Italy. But the Italian government holds that the Reggia is one of the kingdom's monuments and relics and so it was impossible to accept the American's offer. Of course this huge work of art could not be taken out of the country, but its sale would have violated in a sense the law which forbids the sale of antiquities to foreigners.

The Reggia, which dates from 1302, contains 600 rooms and has an extensive frontage on the lower lake at Mantua. It has filled a large space in Italian history. During the epoch of the Gonzagas it was the center of culture, the arts and sciences, and there the most renowned artists, scholars and scientists found hospitality and financial aid if they needed it.

Miss Anne Morgan, the financier's daughter, who has toured Italy often, studying all periods and schools of Italian art, strongly urged her father to buy the Reggia, and was greatly impressed with the place where Isabella d'Este, the most gifted woman of the Italian renaissance, held her famous court.

J. Pierpont Morgan.

The original splendor of the palace is best preserved in the apartments of Isabella d'Este, which were decorated by Geulio Romano, Raphael's greatest pupil. The frescoes on the ceilings of these apartments were done by Andora Mategun. A hundred and fifty years later Rubens visited the Mantua court and contributed to the decorations of the palace.

Countess Morosini, a beautiful noblewoman of Venice who has much influence at court, interested herself to further Mr. Morgan's purpose to buy the Reggia.

The people of Mantua are deeply disappointed that Mr. Morgan did not gain ownership of the Reggia. It was his intention to restore it to all its former glories, but the public and tourists would have had access to it still.

Exporting Hydraulic Power.

The government of Denmark proposes to carry out with the aid of its engineers the following plan: Upon the southern shore of the Sund is found the old city of Helsingborg, not far from which the Lagu rushes down from an elevated plateau over a stretch of about thirty kilometers. A fall of 100 meters is situated not more than two kilometers from the mouth of the Lagu. It is at this point and for the purpose of using this important natural motive force that it has been decided to establish a hydro electric plant, transmitting its current to Helsingborg (first relay). The submarine cables traversing the Sund permit the distribution of the electric energy produced in Sweden over the territory of Denmark. The island of Seland, in which is found the Danish capital, will be the first to benefit by this installation, which will be very easily carried out, for between Helsingborg (Sweden) and Helsingor (Denmark) the arm of the sea is very narrow, not more than five kilometers wide; due to this circumstance the work necessary for the establishment of the submarine cables does not present any insurmountable difficulties.

Turkish Women Indifferent.

According to the Frankfurter Zeitung, the attempt to establish a woman's newspaper in Turkey, which was to agitate for the raising of the status of Mohammedan women, has proved a failure. The journal, which is entitled Mehasin, bore on the title-page the motto of the advanced Turkish ladies: "In every nation women are the measure of its civilization." But although the editor, Asaf Muammer Bey, brought a great deal of skill and knowledge to bear on his work, his enterprise from the first has been a dismal failure. Then he took to illustrations, with no better result, and finally he fell back on fashion plates and cookery recipes. The Frankfurter Zeitung says that even with these additional attractions the circulation of Mehasin does not exceed 400 copies.

DISLIKE THE BROAD STREETS

Londoners Abhor Spacious Thoroughfares and Prefer the Narrow Lanes to Walk In.

London.—Londoners like narrow streets. They love to be jostled and abhor broad, spacious thoroughfares, where there is plenty of room to walk.

This interesting opinion was given by a Regent street land agent and surveyor, who said that the growing tendency to construct wide streets was a "fatal mistake" from a shopkeeper's point of view.

"Bond street, Cheapside, the Strand and other more or less narrow streets," he said, "owe much of their commercial success to their narrowness and consequent warm, sociable atmosphere. If Oxford street and Regent street were as narrow I think their commercial value would be increased.

"In wide streets, one side is sure to suffer. Thus along Piccadilly most people going toward Hyde Park walk on the left to Prince's restaurant, and then on the right until they reach the park."

"As for the north side of the Strand, it is most curious to note," said another real estate agent, "how the huge east going traffic melts away at the Gaiety theater and the west-going traffic equally mysteriously dies away at the law courts.

"So, too, with the Embankment—the shortest route between the city and Westminster. It is wide and open and commands a magnificent view, but it is lonely—as lonely as the south side of Piccadilly along the railings of the green park."

The question inevitably arises: "Are Londoners suffering from agoraphobia, or 'fear of open spaces'—a well-defined nervous disease?"

"I would not like to say that agoraphobia, even in a mild form, could affect a whole community," said a well-known nerve specialist, "but there can be little doubt that city bred people find great consolation in a crowd.

"Some years ago I was employed in making a medical examination of thousands of emigrants to Canada. Quite a number of London people, thoroughly healthy in every way, were depressed by the loneliness of their new life, and some went so far as to throw up excellent prospects in Canada and return to the hardships of London life, preferring poverty in a crowd to wealth and comfort in a sparsely populated country."

Baby Crop Short.

Topeka, Kan.—The baby crop in Kansas is falling off. Despite the fact that in corn, wheat and oats Kansas this year astonished the world with a message that out of those three crops alone it made $15,000,000 more than any year before in its history, the sad admission is made that the stork came to Kansas more than 2,000 less times in the last fiscal year than in the previous one. The whole baby crop for the Sunflower state for the last fiscal year, according to statistics gathered for the census bureau, numbers 23,850, against 25,980 babies for the preceding 12 months.

NO PLOWS IN PANAMA ZONE

United States Bureau of Soils Reports Agricultural Possibilities as First Class.

Washington.—The Panama canal zone, considered from an agricultural standpoint, is a country possessed of possibilities, but utterly devoid of plows, farmers or farming. That is the substance of a report made by H. H. Bennett, one of the experts of the United States bureau of soils after an examination of the land of the canal strip. Mr. Bennett's opinion of the possibility of the canal strip is not pessimistic by any means.

"We find among the Panamanians the crudest agriculture imaginable," he says in his report. "They do no plowing or cultivating, but simply put in a few hills of corn, rice or inferior vegetables and allow nature to do the work. How they can live on these little patches of a half acre or so is more than I can understand at this time. They do live, however, and occasionally sell enough fruit to buy a little rum and some clothes for the older members of the family.

"There are no plows on the isthmus of Panama, as far as we have been able to learn, except a few belonging to the canal commission. There is not a great variety of soils, but they are exceedingly hard to get at. The topography is extremely humpy and rough.

"Trails are scarce and often impassable on foot. They are never passable in a buggy. The only way to move through the uncleared country is to cut a path. So far I have seen two important soils. One is a residual red clay and the other a brown clay loam of alluvial origin. The former covers about three-fourths of the territory explored on the Pacific side.

"I believe that as a result of our investigations there will be some effort to establish school gardens throughout the zone as a means of interesting the children of laborers and natives in agriculture."

HERMITS ARE HAPPY

Woman Over 70 Never Saw Trolley Car, Electric Car or Automobile —Has Not Left House Since Husband's Death.

Allentown, Pa.—On the southern slope of the Blue mountains, in Lynn township, beyond the Jacksonville, live an elderly couple in a dilapidated story-and-a-half log cabin who are remarkable for the simple life they lead and for their hermit-like existence. They are August Betka and Mrs. Abigail Frey, but known thereabouts as "Die Alt Ab" ("the old Ab").

Their home is near a little traveled road leading across the Blue mountain from Jacksonville to Tamaqua, and two and a half miles from the former village. It is the only habitation thereabouts, and is as lonely and secluded a place as the veriest recluse could desire. Rarely, very rarely, indeed, does any one wander to their forest home, save occasional berry pickers and hunters.

Their cabin is a rough, antiquated structure of logs, about 10x14 feet, with a primitive porch in front, surrounded by a rough stone wall. The house has only one door and two windows. It has one room with a sort of vestibule. There is, however, an attic, reached by a rickety stair. The basement is a low apartment, and tradition has it that at one time it was used as a moonshine distillery.

Here, in season, the occupants of the home maintain a modest little garden with a few staple vegetables as well as a few flowers. They keep no live stock, nor even hogs or chickens, cats or dogs. Here, remote from contact with their fellows, they eke out a scant subsistence. At the time the correspondent visited them about half a dozen cottontails, trophies of Mrs. Frey's prowess with the gun (for she is an expert shot), hung from the rafters overhead, and thus she keeps the larder replenished with fresh meat. A lot of rabbit skins also hung on the outer walls of the porch.

Gus Betko is a German, born in Prussia, and is 76 years old, and is a robust and vigorous old fellow. No one knows when he came into that neighborhood. He works at times for farmers in Lynn township, generally in the potato season, besides which he makes ax helves, singletrees and butchers' yokes. Old Mrs. Frey cuts down the trees from which the wood is procured.

Mrs. Frey was born and spent her whole lifetime in the Blue mountain. Her father was known as "Der Roth Follweiler" (the red Follweiler), to distinguish him from others of this well-known family with other characteristics as to color. Their home was on top of the mountain and along the old Indian trail, by which the red man traversed between the Delaware and the Susquehanna valleys long before the white man ever set foot in Pennsylvania. Their home is now a pile of ruins.

Follweiler kept a primitive tavern there for the accommodation of chance wayfarers, and there Abigail was born 73 years ago. In her earlier days she attended the battalions and frolics of the region, whose memory she still recalls with intense pleasure. In her twenty-eighth year she married Joshua Frey, and they moved to their present home. The stone wall which surrounds the house she helped as a bride to build. They had one child, which died in infancy.

Here Mr. and Mrs. Frey lived and eked out a living, well content with their lot, and not caring about the carryings on of the greater world beyond.

One day in 1882 Mrs. Frey had occasion to go to the village of Jacksonville, two and a half miles away. When she returned she found her husband sitting at the window, apparently awaiting her return. When she spoke to him she found that an unbidden visitor had preceded her and had laid his hands on Mr. Frey. The shock was so great that from that day to this, 27 years, Mrs. Frey has not been in Jacksonville or any distance from home, and in the last 12 years she has not been away from the clearing surrounding her cabin home.

By tilling the little garden and by shooting game and birds she is able to keep body and soul together. She also works baskets, for which there is sufficient demand among the neighboring farmers, and these Gus takes to the village to sell. In addition the county poor directors contribute 50 cents a week to her support, of which fund Joshua Lutz, the hotel-keeper at Jacksonville, is custodian, and which he handles faithfully for Abigail's benefit.

Mrs. Frey never saw a trolley car; she never saw an electric light; she never saw an automobile, and if she ever saw a railroad train it is pretty certain that she never rode in one.

They are content with their lot, and Abigail's world is confined within the 20 by 40 feet. What is beyond she neither knows nor cares.

Travels Million Miles.

Creston, Ia.—One hundred miles a day is the record of Conductor Charles Flint of this city, as he figures it, since he began work for the Burlington road 48 years ago. Forty years of that time he has been in the capacity of conductor. He figures off one year of the 40 to allow for sickness and vacations, and at the rate of 100 miles a day he estimates he has traveled more than 1,216,800 miles, or a distance of more than forty-eight times around the earth. Conductor Flint began work for the Burlington in 1861.

GIRL ABSTAINER IS AWARDED

Young Miss of Germantown, Pa., Receives Gold Watch for Essay on Total Abstinence.

Philadelphia, Pa.—From a long list of competitors in all parts of the city Miss Sarah B. O'Donnell, aged 14 years, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John O'Donnell of Germantown, has won the gold watch donated by a representative of the Catholic Total Abstinence union for the best essay on "Why I Am a Total Abstainer."

Miss O'Donnell stands head in her class in the eighth grade of the girls' school on Price street, taught by the Sisters of St. Joseph. She is also an active member of St. Vincent's guild of the Sacred Thirst. Some of her reasons for total abstinence follow:

"First, for the glory of God; second, for my own sake; third, for the sake of those who love me and whom I love. I do it for the glory of God because he thirsted for me on the cross, and when he did thirst for me I in return should show some appreciation for this great suffering.

"I do it for my own sake to preserve my woman's dignity, for just the habits I form now when I am a child these same habits will I have when I become a woman."

RAISING CRICKETS FOR ZOO

Curator to Make Things Livelier in Reptile House This Winter—To Cultivate Insects.

New York.—Curator Ditmars of the Bronx Zoo is raising crickets to make things livelier in the reptile house this winter.

Among four varieties he has procured for the fireplace in this building is one with the appropriate name of rattlesnake cricket. The others are the field cricket, which makes the summer boarder dismal after the sun has set; the tree cricket and the sleigh bell cricket, whose song resembles the tinkle of winter chimes.

Last winter Mr. Ditmars, one cold night, heard a chirp and on lifting a brick out of the hearth in his dining room, discovered a cricket. For about three months it cheered the home of the curator. So last summer he determined to cultivate a colony of them and keep them in the reptile house, where they will make the only music to be heard there.

Year's Tobacco Output.

Washington.—More than 150,000,000 pounds of cigar tobacco and nearly four times that quantity of the other types of tobacco was grown in the United States in 1909, according to a bulletin issued by the department of agriculture.

Kentucky leads all the states in tobacco grown, producing more than one-third of the crop of the country and about one-ninth of the entire crop of the world. While some tobacco is produced in almost every state, less than one per cent. of this country's crop is grown west of the Mississippi river, Texas being the only trans-Mississippi state in which the industry has gained much importance.

Story of a Moving Pumpkin.

A pumpkin was seen to walk across the field by Mrs. Samuel H. Hight of Skowegan recently. When she saw it she thought her eyes were deceiving her, but she soon perceived that the pumpkin moved a little way, stopped and then turned in another direction. She watched this object for some time and told one of her neighbors. The mystery was solved, but the two women did not dare to go nearer the moving vegetable, but called a man who knocked the pumpkin over and found a polecat. The skunk had crawled under the pumpkin and stuck his head into a hole in it and was unable to extricate himself from it and had walked off as best he could with the pumpkin on his back.—Lewiston Journal.

WESTERN CANADA

Senator Dolliver, of Iowa, says:—

"The stream of emigrants from the United States to Canada will continue."

160 ACRE FARMS IN WESTERN CANADA FREE

Senator Dolliver recently paid a visit to Western Canada, and says: "There is a land hunger in the hearts of English speaking people; this will account for the removal of so many Iowa farmers to Canada. Our people are pleased with its Government and the excellent administration of law, and they are coming to you in tens of thousands, and they are still coming."

Iowa contributed largely to the 70,000 American farmers who made Canada their home during 1909. Field crop returns alone during year added to the wealth of the country upwards of Grain growing, mixed farming, cattle raising and dairying are all profitable. Free Homesteads of 160 acres are to be had in the very best districts, 160 acre pre-emptions at $3.00 per acre within certain areas. Schools and churches in every settlement, climate unexcelled, soil the richest, wood, water and building material plentiful.

$170,000,000.00

For particulars as to location, low settlers' railway rates and descriptive illustrated pamphlet, "Last Best West," and other information, write to Sup't of Immigration, Ottawa, Can., or to Canadian Government Agent.

"Cascarets are certainly fine. I gave a friend one when the doctor was treating him for cancer of the stomach. The next morning he passed four pieces of a tape worm. He then got a box and in three days he passed a tape-worm 45 feet long. It was Mr. Matt Freck, of Millersburg, Dauphin Co., Pa. I am quite a worker for Cascarets. I use them myself and find them beneficial for most any disease caused by impure blood."

TAX PAYER WANTS TO KNOW WHY

So He Conducts Personal Investigation to Satisfy His Curiosity.

What He Has Learned About the Charges Against County Officials.

To the Editor,

Dear Sir: As a tax payer and citizen of Red Lake county, I want to know the whys and wherefors of a few movements that are now on.

I read in the Thief River Falls newspapers and in some of the outside papers that an application, urged on by several Thief River Falls people, had been made to the governor, asking him to remove the county auditor and the chairman of the board of county commissioners.

Now, it seems to me that if these officers are in the wrong and ought to be put out of office, that we tax payers of Red Lake county ought to find it out for ourselves, and not ask the governor to mix up in our private troubles, unless there is very good reason for it, since it is our money that these men handle.

So, I went to the county offices at Red Lake Falls the other day to see for myself, just what there was to it.

I found that the main complaint against these two officers is because the county board last July voted to transfer thirty-five thousand dollars of idle money from the General Ditch Fund into the County Revenue Fund, where it was needed, and where it would work for the county and save paying interest on what the county owes.

I found that when the board voted to transfer the money, the county attorney, their legal adviser, was present and did not tell them it was wrong or illegal to do this.

It seems that the county had this money lying idle in the banks, drawing only two per cent interest on it, while at the same time, the county now owes about nine thousand dollars in outstanding warrants drawn on the general revenue fund, on which debt it is paying six per cent interest to these same banks that have its money.

It looks to me like putting a hundred dollars of your own money in the savings bank, and getting five per cent interest on it, and then borrowing your same money back from the banker, and paying him ten per cent interest on your own cash.

So, it seems to me that when the county board resolved to use the idle money in the ditch fund to pay the county debt and stop the six per cent interest, they used mighty good judgment, and did just what I would do in my own business.

Well, some time after this the board found out that there were people in Thief River Falls, (maybe some of the banks which were getting big interest) who objected to their paying the county warrants this way, and stopping interest, so to save trouble, and for the sake of peace, at a special meeting of the board, they passed another resolution transferring this thirty-five thousand dollars back again into the ditch fund where it came from, and there it is today. And no harm done to anybody that I can see.

Now, I want to know what all the hollering is about. Nobody has lost any money. Following the order of the board, the auditor made a little entry on his books, and then following the next order of the board, rubbed it out again. It seems to me somebody is wasting a lot of time, ink and wind shouting to the governor for help over nothing.

I tried to find out where the board got its notion of transferring the ditch money to the general fund. "Why," they said, "its been done before." "Who did it," I asked. "The county commissioners from Thief River Falls" was the reply. That seemed unbelieveable, because it is only the Thief River Falls people who are kicking now, and they say ex county commissioner Dan Shaw of Thief River Falls was down to see the governor about it last week.

So we looked up the old records of the county board, and sure enough it had been done before, just as they said.

On January 6th, 1904, at a regular meeting of the board, Commissioner Louis Hanson of Thief River Falls made a motion that fourteen thousand dollars of idle ditch money be transferred from the General Ditch Fund to the General Revenue Fund, and the motion was seconded by Commissioner Ole J. Johnson of Wyandotte, and upon being put to a vote was carried, and the money was transferred, and nobody has ever objected.

Again on December 11th, 1907, at a meeting of the board, Commissioner Daniel Shaw of Thief River Falls moved that the sum of six thousand dollars be transferred from the General Ditch Fund to the General Revenue Fund, and the motion carried and the money was transferred.

Upon inquiry, I find that the law was just the same on both these occasions as it is now.

There wasn't any kick registered from Thief River Falls when Louis Hanson and Dan Shaw did these things.

It looks as if things were only considered wrong when done by some one who don't hail from Thief River Falls.

And perhaps the people of Red Lake Falls feel pretty much the same about their town.

These two towns keep the rest of the county in hot water all the time. They are like a couple of bad kids in a cradle, fighting and quarreling, and making so much noise that the rest of the whole county full of people can't hear themselves think.

Isn't it about time that some of us outsiders who want peace in the county, take both kids by the scruff of the neck and shake them till they shut up?

Now, these things that I have found out, any of you tax payers or farmers can find out for yourself if you look over the county records, and I think it is a mighty mean piece of business for any one, whether he lives in Thief River Falls or any where else, to stir up so much trouble and talk over nothing, and try to injure two good county officers who have done no more than what they felt to be their duty.

Yours truly,
TAX PAYER.

ANOTHER AMENDMENT

Proposed Constitutional Amendment to be Voted Upon Next Fall.

To the Editor:

On the eighth of November next the electors of Minnesota will have a chance to make an X on a separate pink ballot opposite the proposed contitutional amendment for an annual tax of one-fifteenth of a mill on each dollar of taxable property (equal to seven cents on each thousand dollars) for reforestation. To adopt the amendment requires a majority of all votes cast at the election. The elector will probably first vote for the several candidates for state offices, members of the legislature, county officers and representatives in congress, whose name will be on another ballot, and he may feel too much in a hurry to stop to vote for this amendment. Besides, there is a natural feeling in every one to vote against an increase of taxes. So in spite of all talk for reforestation, this amendment is liable to fail.

If the amendment be adopted, there will annually be raised about $72,000, which the forestry board can use in the purchase at not over $3 per acre of forestry land and in planting it according to forestry principles. Naturally land at that price will be mostly sandy and only fit to produce pine trees. The experience of Germany shows that pine planted on such land will, on an average, yield 18,000 board feet per acre in eighty years, at which time the trees will be about twelve inches in diameter breast high and that the investment will net three per cent compound interest. The present generation will get the benefit of most of the $73,000 yearly in payment for labor. Future generations will get the timber, and the public generally will derive benefit in the increase of wealth, in increased beauty of scenery, improvment of climate, soil, waterflow and covert for useful game. Good roads go with forests. The European state forests are health and pleasure resorts for the people.

Since its first settlement the population of the United States has increased at the average rate of eighteen per cent every ten years. At the same rate it will in eigthy years be 320,000,000.

It is very seldom that individual will plant forests when they have to wait eighty years for a crop. The state must do it. Of the present cut-over pine lands in Minnesota only about five per cent have become well restocked with valuable kinds of timbor. It would take centuries for nature alone to restore our forests. Nature has a better chance to renew forest in Prussia than in Minnesota; yet Prussia plants fifty thousand acres of forest annually.

The question is sometimes asked, why should the state buy land when it now owns land? The land which the state owns is school and state constitution land, which, according to the constitution, must be offered at public sale—the school lands at not less than $5 per acre, and the state constitution land at not less than $3.75 per acre, the proceeds to go into permanent funds. Besides, the most of the state land will be utilized for agriculture.

As a source of a leading industry the Minnesota forests will be exhausted in a dozen years. The state should begin reforestation.

How will your county vote on this question? Which shall be the banner county for reforestation? I ask that public-spirited people in each county appoint a committee to communicate with an energetic person in each precinct in the county who will give the matter proper attention.

C. C. Andrews,
Forestry Commissioner.

St. Paul, January 15, 1910.

Provision May Be Inserted in General Bill.

Reliable information comes from Washington to the effect that Representative Steenerson, who, with Mr. Hanna, of North Dakota, is urging legislation for a survey of the Red River of the North with a view to the construction of reservoirs for the prevention of floods and the improvement of navigation, has received assurances from the members of the committee that the provision will be inserted in the river and harbor bill now being prepared

A GOOD CONCERT

Eckhart Family Under Auspices of M. W. A. Lodge.

A good concert is to be given at the M. W. A hall, under the auspices of the lodge, next Wednesday evening, when the Eckhart Family Concert company will appear. The Eckharts are reputed to be accomplished musicians and entertainers and no doubt the concert will be a good one. The members of the company are Swiss bell ringers, vocalists and play various musical instruments. Reserved seats are on sale at Holzman's jewelry store.

CENSUS ENUMERATORS

Time for Filing Applications is Extended.

Owing to the delay in printing certain of the blanks the director of the Census has authorized the extention of the time when applications may be received by the supervisor until Jan. 31. Persons seeking appointment as enumerator should write to the supervisor requesting application blanks. These will be forwarded as soon as received and, on account of the delay in printing, should be filled out and returned promptly to the supervisor. All applications for the Ninth District should be made to Daniel W. Meeker, Supervisor of Census, Moorhead.

The test for census enumerators will be held at several places throughout the district on Feb. 5th, and each applicant will receive a card admitting him to examination that date.

A person to be eligible to appointment as enumerator must be a citizen of the United States between the ages of 18 and 70, and must never have been convicted of a crime. If he is an assessor or is in any way connected with the assessment of collection of taxes he can not serve as an enumerator. In this connection all township and village assessors elected in 1909, except in villages incorporated under special laws, are ineligible for appointment. The Minnesota legislature in 1909 passed a law (Chapter 316) which makes the terms of township and village assessors two years instead of one, and extends the terms of all those elected in 1909 to cover the assessment period of 1910. Under the rules of the Post Office Department, postmasters, mail clerks and carriers are also prohibited from serving as enumerators.

A GOOD ROADS ORGANIZATION

Township Officers Should Co-Operate in Effort to Secure Better Highways.

Last Saturday evening a number of the business and professional men of the city met at the office of P. B. Gaass and a Good Roads Club was organized. The new organization starts out with a membership of forty and many more will become interested in the work the club plans to do. The officers elected are:

Vice President—Dr. N. M. Watson
Secy.-Treas.—F. L. Farley

Board of Directors—V. M. Higinbotham, J. A. Duffy, Geo. F. Hennings, Samuel Gibeau. The officers are also members of the board of directors.

The club will undertake practical work. An effort will be made to get the roads leading into the city into better condition and the matter of securing the erection of guide boards along the highways of the county will be taken up. Other work will be taken up, though the plan of campaign for better roads has not been definitely decided upon.

The townspeople who are interested in this movement ask the co-operation of the township officers and of the country people in general. Everybody will be benefitted by the improvement of the highways and general co-operation is most desirable.

LIFE OF JOHN A. JOHNSON

The Interesting Story of a Remarkable Career.

The Life of John Albert Johnson is now offered for sale and there is a big demand for the book. Frank Jeffers is manager of sales for southern Red Lake county and he says that he has already received fifty orders for the book with very little solicitation. The book is very neatly made; it is well printed and bound and is finely illustrated. It is the work of two personal friends of the late governor, Messrs. Day and Knappen, the former Mr. Johnson's private secretary during his incumbency of the governor's office. The book may be had in cloth, half-leather or full-leather binding at $2.00, $3.50 and $5.00.

TO BE BRONZE STATUE

Commission Decides Upon the Memorial to Late Governor John A. Johnson.

The memorial to the late Gov. John A. Johnson will take the form of a bronze statue of heroic size that will be located on the capital grounds in the city of St. Paul. The sculptor will be selected without prize-offering competition, the executive committee of the commission being authorized to request one or more sculptors of national and international reputation to submit sketch models, from which the committee, with the approval of the commission, will make the final selection. The selection of a site on the capital grounds for the statue will be left to the executive commission, which has been instructed to consult with Gov. Eberhart and Cass Gilbert, architect of the state capitol, and to report its findings to the commission for final approval.

The fund raised by voluntary subscriptions, after deducting $275 for expenses, amounts to $23,900. About 90,000 people contributed to the fund. The school children of the state contributed $2,478. Nearly $1,000 came from people residing outside of Minnesota.

Peanut Shells for Breakfast.

An Associated Press dispatch from Chicago, dated Jan. 3, says:

The Chicago Federation of Labor yesterday adopted resolutions calling upon the National Pure Food Commission to investigate if peanut shells constitute the basic element in the manufacture of breakfast foods.

"In a recent freight train wreck it was discovered that several cars consigned to breakfast food concerns were loaded with peanut shells from the peanut butter factories in the south," said Pres. John Fitzpatrick.

Intoxicating Extracts Next.

Lemon and vanilla extracts are the next things W. E. Johnson, government Indian agent, is going after in the reservation countries of the northern part of Minnesota, where he has just closed nearly sixty saloons.

Mr. Johnson has found by long experience that the closing of saloons and the shutting off of whiskey itself is invariably followed by some substitute which "Poor Lo" resorts to. In Minnesota it is the flavoring extracts, according to W. G. Calderwood, secretary of the state prohibition committee. Some of these extracts contain as high as 40 per cent of alcohol and a couple of small bottles are guaranteed to produce a drunken Indian.—Fertile Journal.

Lizotte-Roy.

The marriage of Charles Roy to Miss Mary Lizotte, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Vitol Lizotte, occurred at 9 o'clock Wednesday afternoon, Jan. 19. The ceremony was performed at St. Joseph's church in the presence of relatives and a few invited guests, Rev. Fr. Bossus officiating. Following the ceremony there was a wedding dinner and reception at the home of the bride's parents.

Is Hailed as the New Leader of Democracy in State of Minnesota.

The Gazette will break away from the print shop rule of not printing things about the members of the Gazette family, because this story is about John E. King, the senior editor, and he isn't here to protest against its publication. The state fair election which has supplied much material for political dopesters recently resulted in a surprise. Many people believed that the election of John J. Furlong to the presidency of the state agricultural society would make of the state fair patronage a big political machine. A fight was made on Mr. Furlong. After his election had been conceeded, his defeat was accomplished, J. M. Underwood of Lake City being elected, and the state convention was thrown into all sorts of spasms of excitement.

In its report of the unusual event the Minneapolis Tribune had the following to say:

"In the triumphant procession which the Underwood victors led last night through the streets of St. Paul, the chariot of the democratic kitchen cabinet was the chief interest. Driving that chariot is John King, state librarian. Mr. King today is the leading figure in democracy, eclipsing in importance the position formerly occupied by Frank A. Day, chairman of the democratic state central committee.

"As a result of the victory, the friends of Mr. King were boosting him last night as a successor to Mr. Day in the leadership of the democratic party. In the lobby of the Merchants hotel, where the victorious and defeated ones gathered, "all hail to John King" was the slogan. It was generally acknowledged that, although the kitchen cabinet had taken a prominent part in the state fair fight under the direction of Frank A. Day, it was under the direct leadership of John King, supported by State Senator Harry Weis, of Le Suer, that actual victory had been planned and won."

The Tribune also printed a poetic effusion which will be of interest to Gazette readers so it is printed below:

O State Fair trinity,
Band of the noble three!
Long wave John King!
Day, Weis, and John they are,
Of these three John's the star—
For he can see most far:
Long wave John King!
O Kitchen Cabinet,
This be thy motto yet:
Long wave John King!
Who says your power is dead,
With such men at your head?
You sleep just when your fed—
Long wave John King!

The Russian foreign office has taken no action on the memorandum presented by the United States government relative to the neutralization of the Manchurian railroad, which has been submitted for a careful examination conjointly by the ministers of finance and war. The ultimate attitude of Russia will depend largely upon the reception of the proposals by the other powers, and the developments in this matter will necessarily consume a great deal of time.

JOHNSON STATUE

CAPITOL SITE IS CHOSEN FOR THE MONUMENT FOR JOHN ALBERT JOHNSON.

WORK TO BEGIN AT ONCE

Memorial Commission Will Engage Noted Sculptor.—Nearly Twenty-Five Thousand Dollars Contributed to Memorial.

Minneapolis, Minn.— Approximately $25,000 will be expended on a magnificent bronze statue of Governor John Albert Johnson, designed by a distinguished sculptor, and placed on the state capitol grounds at St. Paul. This was decided upon by the Governor J. A. Johnson Memorial commission in a meeting at the Minnesota club. The statue will be of heroic size, eight of the 14 commissioners present voting in favor of the standing posture.

The commission decided not to have an open competition, but authorized the executive committee to select a sculptor of world-wide prominence, requesting him to submit a sketch and design. The selection of the exact site on the capitol grounds was left to the executive committee, acting with Governor Eberhart and Cass Gilbert, final powers resting with the commission.

Treasurer B. F. Nelson's report showed a total of $23,950.40 subscribed. This probably will be augmented to some extent before the completion of the statue, as a resolution was passed that the fund be left open as long as the commission exists, although there will be no canvassing.

The report of the subscriptions by counties showed Ramsey in the lead, with $6,810.12, or more than one-fourth of the total collected. Hennepin is second with $3,605.99; St. Louis county third, with $2,407.37. Jackson county was the most backward of all with but $4.50 to its credit. Minnesota school children showed their love for their dead governor by sending in $2,478. Contributions from points outside the state footed up to $836.50.

An entirely different fund being raised in Nicollet county, the home of Governor Johnson, practically estopped the citizens of that district from participating in the larger movement for the monument at the state capitol. St. Peter, the county seat of Nicollet county, was the only other bidder for the location of the state memorial, but, in view of the fact that another monument was being provided for the grave side, the capitol was given the unanimous preference.

Those present at the meeting of the commission were: President C. D. O'Brien, St. Paul; Vice President A. C. Weiss, Duluth; Treasurer B. F. Nelson, Minneapolis; Secretary C. W. Ames, St. Paul; D. M. Neill, Red Wing; Elmer E. Adams, Fergus Falls; L. J. Boughner, Minneapolis; H. G. Day, Albert Lea; W. H. Hunter, St. Paul; Mrs. C. O. Highee, St. Paul; H. V. Jones, Minneapolis; S. B. Nelson, Luverne; A. J. Sackett, St. Peter.

STATE FAIR PROBE.

Public Examiner Schaefer Makes Report to Governor.

St. Paul, Minn.—No direct, but some indirect criticism of the management of the state fair, is contained in the report of the examination just made by Public Examiner Anton Schaefer. The report is a voluminous affair, covering over 50 typewritten pages. It states conditions at the fair with much detail. It shows the manner in which money is expended, tables of expenditures, touches on the matter of passes, insinuatingly refers to the expense account of John J. Furlong for "special work" quoting the words "special work" and calling attention to the fact that no report or explanation is made of the character of the "special work."

Public Examiner Schaefer's report, being made to the governor, can be used by the next executive as the basis of recommendations to the legislature, if he so chooses. In view of the coming election of officers of the state fair board, it will attract more than usual attention. The public examiner expressly states that all accounts are correct, but he dwells with a special emphasis on the matter of expense accounts, so much so that it is clear that he intends the expenditures do not appeal to him as entirely proper, although he expressly refrains from saying so.

JOHN LIND OUT OF POLITICS.

Former Governor Writes He Will Never Be Candidate.

New Ulm. — "No, you will never have an opportunity to vote for me again. I shall not be a candidate for office. Such time as I can spare for public work I give to the university, and really a good deal more time than I can afford to spare. I don't know of any better way in which to show, in fact, at least my gratitude to the people of the state for the many honors I have enjoyed at their hands in the past.

("Signed) JOHN LIND."

SMITH TO BE SENTENCED SOON.

Mankato.—Frank Smith, who was convicted of the murder of the late H. J. Ledheter, is to receive his sentence next Tuesday afternoon. The motion will be argued in a few days.

H. F. Daine, deputy collector of internal revenue, will have charge of the collection in this city.

JONES IS GUILTY

SO SAYS JURY IN RUGBY BANK WRECKING CASE—CONVICTED ON 14 COUNTS.

JURY WAS OUT 4 HOURS

Judge's Charge to Jury Fair—Evidence Should Show Embezzlement of National Bank Currency.

Fargo, N. D., Jan. 13.—After listening for two hours to the charge of Judge Charles F. Amidon, followed by a score of objections by Judge Edward Engerud, the jury in the case of the United States against Andy Jones, indicted and tried on the charge of embezzlement, misapplication, abstraction, the making of false entries and issuing of false certificates of deposit, retired at exactly 12 o'clock this noon to weigh the evidence and decide the fate of the accused man.

In opening, the court enumerated the counts that had been dismissed leaving fourteen for the consideration of the jury. The remaining counts were then taken up singly. The statute relating to embezzlement was read to the jury.

The jury returned its verdict at 4:40 p. m.

Jones was found guilty on all but one of the fifteen counts upon which the government based its case.

On receiving the verdict of guilty, Judge C. F. Amidon raised Jones' bail bonds to $50,000. During the trial he has been out on $20,000 bonds.

Jones is now in the custody of U. S. Marshall James Shea.

The daringness of the defendant was demonstrated when he placed his fate in the hands of the jury without one iota of evidence being offered in his behalf. Nothing but an argument before the jury was made. By some it is held that the former manager of the Rugby institution has failed to realize the seriousness of the situation, stoutly maintaining of the innocence at all times.

Never has the outcome of a case in the federal court been watched so closely.

LAMPHER MADE CONFESSION.

Had Guilty Knowledge of Death of Three Men.

St. Louis, Jan. 14.—According to The Post-Dispatch, Ray Lamphere, who died recently in the penitentiary at Michigan City, Ind., while serving sentence for burning the home of Mrs. Belle Gunness near LaPorte, Ind., did not carry the secrets of the Gunness charnal house to the grave.

The Post-Dispatch, in a copyrighted story today, says Lamphere confessed, when he thought he was near death, to a man of unassailable character.

Lamphere, according to The Post-Dispatch, had guilty knowledge of the murders of three men in the Gunness home during the time he lived there about eight months in 1907, and he assisted Mrs. Gunness in disposing of the bodies of three men. He said he thought he had not received as much of the profits of the transaction as he considered himself entitled to and he went to the farm house one night with a woman, chloroformed Mrs. Gunness, her three children and Jennie Olson. He and the women then searched the house, finding between $60 and $70. The light they used was a candle and they left the house without knowing they left behind a spark that soon burst into flames.

Mrs Gunness' method of killing her victims, Lamphere said, was first to chloroform them as they slept and then if the drug did not kill to sever the head with an axe.

Each time when a man was to be murdered, according to Lamphere, she sent him to buy chloroform. When Hegelin came from South Dakota with a check for $2,893, the check was cashed. Mrs. Gunness sent Lamphere to Michigan City to remain all night. He, however, returned unexpectedly to the Gunness home and through a hole in the floor heard Hegelin groan in distress and beg Mrs. Gunness to send for a doctor. Lamphere said she had given Heglin chloroform. Hegelin fell to the floor, and presently he saw Mrs. Gunness strike Hegelin and end his life. He helped Mrs. Gunness bury the man the next day.

BULLOCK FOR FORESTER

REPORTED THAT TAFT MAY NAME HIM

President Is Perplexed by Situation in South Dakota and Bullock Is Qualified

Washington, Jan. 11 — In casting about for a successor to Gifford Pinchot to head the forestry service, it was reported today that President Taft might offer the place to Seth Bullock, United States marshall for South Dakota. At the present time Albert F. Potter designated as the acting head of the service seems to be the leading candidate but there are persistent rumors that the president may believe an entirely new man might better reorganize the service.

Bullock is in many respects as close a friend of Former President Roosevelt as is Mr. Pinchot. He was once chief of the forestry rangers in the Black Hills, and is thoroughly familiar with the whole subject of forestry. The political situation in South Dakota has been giving the president some concern of late and Senators Crawford and Gamble have been frequent callers at the White House.

Bullock has been designated for reappointment as marshall for South Dakota. His term expires this month.

AMERICANS STIRRED UP.

U. S. Aviators at Los Angeles After Frenchman's Scalp.

Los Angeles, Jan. 11.—Paulhan's debonaire assumption of the hero part, with his peculiar series of flights at Aviation field, yesterday, has stirred the rival American aviators to a determination to oust him today from the position he snatched suddenly from them when he swept from behind his aeroplane tent and flew over the huge grandstand, dangerously close to the heads of the cheering thousands of spectators.

It is now a contest between America and France, and this is the first day on which the flights will count for prizes.

Williard and Hamilton, who, no less than their chief, Curtiss, are determined to eclipse the performances of the Frenchman, spent hours early today getting ready for their tests.

FEAR WARM WEATHER.

Ohio and Allegheny Rivers Are Near Damage Line.

Pittsburg, Jan. 11.—Bankful of grinding and crunching ice, the Allegheny river today presents a menace to shipping interests should the present cold snap terminate suddenly, as is anticipated by the official weather forecaster.

The Ohio river at this point is ice-gorged, the floes extending as far back up the Allegheny river as Freeport. River navigation has again been abandoned. Coal is to be shipped south today by rail. An estimated 3,000,000 bushels of coal lies unmoved in the coal tows drawn up for safety at points in the Pittsburg territory.

With a rising temperature scheduled for the next forty-eight hours, shipping interests are greatly endangered.

Trial Nearly Finished.

Fargo, N. D., Jan. 12.—It was stated in the court room shortly after adjournment of court this afternoon that the defense in the Jones case would have no evidence to offer. Unless arguments of the attorneys are exceptionally lengthy the case will probably go to the jury some time tomorrow afternoon.

To show business principles employed by Andy Jones, the prosecution this afternoon called A. W. Wells, a banker of Hermann, Minn., who purchased five notes from the Rugby financier, three aggregating $6,500, two being withheld. All of the notes are worthless and are now held by Wells. Except to show the methods of Jones, the transaction had no direct bearing on the present charges for which Jones is being tried. The prosecution is expected to rest by 3:30.

Wallace Statue Unveiled.

Washington, Jan. 11.—In commemoration of his great services to his state and country, a statue of Gen. Lew Wallace, soldier, author and diplomat, was today placed in the capitol, thus making another notable addition to the galaxy of great Americans, whose effigies adorn Statuary hall. Oliver P. Morton, who was governor of Indiana, is another citizen who has been honored by the hoosier state in the same manner. The unveiling today was made the occasion of an imposing ceremony.

The figure was unveiled by Lew Wallace, jr., grandson of the general. Gov. Thomas R. Marshall of Indiana accepted the statue on behalf of his state from the commission which has charge of its preseration.

RIVERS ARE HIGH

CITIES OF ST. LOUIS AND PITTSBURG ENDANGERED BY RISING WATER.

WARNINGS ARE SENT OUT

St. Louis Weather Bureau Sends Out Warning to Protect Property—Ohio Mississippi and Missouri Threaten

St. Louis, Jan 12.—Rains today in Missouri and northern points caused the Mississippi river to assume a threatening aspect. The weather bureau issued a warning to river men to be prepared to protect their property. The Mississippi river is gorged with ice from Chester, Ill., sixty miles below St. Louis, to this city and additional precipitation and melting snow will cause the river to rise.

The Missouri river is gorged at Hermann, Mo., and many smaller gorges are reported north of St. Louis. If the big gorge below here breaks first no great danger will result from the gorges north coming down. The gauge stood this morning at 21.9 feet, a rise of .7 feet in twenty-four hours.

Pittsburg, Jan. 12—With the temperature mounting today, and a thaw at hand the harbor situation here becomes acute. Thousands of tons of ice gorged in the Monongahela, Allegheny and Ohio rivers presented a serious menace. The government officials investigated with a view to blasting the ice dams in an effort to save shipping and harbor property.

ILLINOIS MOB WOULD LYNCH.

Governor Sends Orders to Prevent Lynching at Any Cost.

Vienna, Ill., Jan. 12.—Everything was quiet at Vienna this morning and the mobs formed to avenge the murder of Allen Clark by three negroes on a passenger train near New Burnside had not arrived in Vienna but Company K of Cairo was on the scene prepared to prevent mob violence. The Cairo company arrived at 4 o'clock this morning, after being many hours on the way. The breaking down of an engine delayed their arrival.

Sheriff Mathis, with a scanty force of volunteers he could muster had guarded the frail structure in which the negroes are confined. With the arrival of the militia, the jail was at once garrisoned and several more companies were expected this morning.

Governor Deneen had given the commanding officer of the militia orders to prevent a lynching no matter what the cost.

BIG STRIKE MAY RESULT.

Chicago Switchmen Tell Grievances to Mediators.

Washington, D. C. Jan. 12.—A strike of the switchmen employed by western railroads operating out of Chicago, is probably dependent upon a conference begun today at the offices of the interstate commission.

For several weeks representatives of the Switchmen's Union of North America and the general managers' committee of the Chicago roads have been endeavoring to reach an agreeable adjustment of differences that have arisen between them. The negotiations failed. The matter, it was then agreed, should be referred to Chairman Knapp of the interstate commerce commission and Dr. Neill, commissioner of labor, as mediators, under the Erdman act.

The mediators began today an effort to bring the parties to the controversy together. Behind closed doors, they heard the first statement of the switchmen's representatives. Subsequently, the general managers' committee was called upon for its side of the controversy.

Found Dead in Berth.

St. Paul, Minn., Jan. 12.—Prof. William Robertson of Crookston, Minn., superintendent of the experiment station of the state agricultural station, and head of the Minnesota agricultural branch school at Crookston, was found dead in his berth on a Great Northern railroad train, when the train arrived in Minneapolis today.

Professor Robertson was on his way to St. Paul to attend the annual meeting of the State Agricultural society. Heart failure was pronounced as the cause of death.

Professor Robertson was a widely known authority on agricultural matters. He was a brother of Edward Robertson, president of Wesley college, at Grand Forks.

Red River Survey Gets Boost.

Washington, Jan. 12.—Initial steps to force a survey of the Red river and its tributaries took place today when a sub-committee of the committee on rivers and harbors reported in favor of the project.

It is understood that the Hanna-Steenerson bill will now be incorporated in the rivers and harbors appropriation bill and enable the engineers to arrive at the probable cost of the work at an early day.

House Passes White Slave Bill.

Washington, D. C., Jan. 12.—By a viva voce vote, the house today passed the Bennett-Sabbath "white slave" bill.

No Reform for Boston.

Boston, Jan. 12.—Former Mayor John F. Fitzgerald won the mayoralty fight here yesterday, defeating the so-called reform forces, led by James J. Storrow, by about 1,494 votes.

The most remarkable feature of the election to many was the small vote of 1,783, given to the present mayor, George A. Hibbard, who received 38,-000 votes two years ago, being elected on a "reform" ticket, over Fitzgerald. The fourth mayoralty aspirant, Nathanial H. Taylor, found only 629 supporters.

The figures are those announced in the city hall.

Insanity Increasing in New York.

New York, Jan. 12.—Insanity is increasing in New York state at the rate of 1,000 persons a year, according to a statement made by Miss Mary Vida Clark, in addressing the state charities aid association, of which she is the assistant secretary. On Oct. 1, 1909, says Miss Clark, there were 30,489 insane patients in fifteen hospitals.

Insurgents Win Battle.

San Juan, Del Sur Nicaragua, Jan. 12.—Rumors reached here today of a battle at Acoyapa in which the government forces were defeated by the insurgents.

HOW A DRUNKARD IS EXPOSED IN ALBANIA.

The Moslems hate a drunkard and when found guilty of intoxication the prisoner is paraded in the bazaar at Prisrend, the stronghold of Mohammedanism and fanaticism in Albania. The prisoner is placed on a donkey and with a boy beating a drum in front is marched to jail.

TO RAISE VIOLETS

Two New York Girls Make Success on Very Small Capital.

Operate Farm That Brings Them $2,000 Yearly—First Invest in Hotbed Sashes and Afterwards Build Greenhouse.

New York.—"Our violet crop last year netted us more than $2,000," declared a young woman who raises violets for the New York market. "My sister and I began the business about four years ago with a capital of less than $50 and about as little experience as girls who have lived in the country all their lives could have about anything growing in the ground.

"Our first investment was to 12 unglazed hotbed sashes three by six feet at 70 cents a sash. By glazing the whole lot ourselves the cost came to $19.

"It was in the autumn that we began. While glazing was going on we devoted our evenings to studying up varieties. We soon learned that we must choose between the Marie Louise and the Lady Hume Campbell, as they were quoted as the only double variety suited to commercial growing.

"As the Marie Louise violets were the most popular to the New York market and it was there that we intended to market our flowers, of course we decided on them. Early in March we invested $10 in cuttings of that variety and began work to earnest.

"Following the advice of a successful violet grower we potted these cuttings in two-inch pots in a mixture of one part well-rotted manure to three parts garden soil. Besides mixing thoroughly we sifted this soil to make sure that there were no lumps. We then set the pots in a frame in the garden and covered them with four of the sashes. There were about 1,000 pots in all, containing what we have since learned were very poor cuttings indeed.

"While waiting for the cuttings to root we had our frame built into which they were to be set permanently. This frame was only a rough box six feet wide by 36 feet long, 12 inches deep in the back and half as much in front. The lumber cost us three dollars, and we paid a man a dollar for the half day's work of building it.

"The frame was placed on a fertile spot in the garden. Over the surface of the soil we spread well-rotted stable manure to the depth of three or four inches.

"It required all my sister's and my spare time for about a month to work this in and get the soil to our satisfaction. By that time it was the middle of April and our friendly violet grower made a trip of five miles to determine if our cuttings were ready for planting.

"Acting on his advice we selected the largest for planting first, leaving the small ones for the last. We knocked them carefully out of the pots and set them in the frame eight inches apart in six-inch rows. This soon brought us to the end of our space with almost half our plants, most of them quite small, still in the pots.

"There was nothing for it but to build another frame and get more glass. As our cash was running low my sister and I decided to dispense with the carpenter's services and do the building ourselves. This we found easy enough and by the end of the month we had the satisfaction of setting out the last of our young plants. These being very small we set them only six inches apart in five-inch rows.

Our next step was to make a suitable shade against the time when the plants would need protection from the direct rays of the sun. This we constructed ourselves by fastening laths to wire clotheslines with double pointed tacks. We selected this means of protection because the screen could be easily rolled up when not in use.

"Our plants began to bloom about the middle of September, and though we kept the blossoms closely picked we did not attempt to sell them until the first week in October.

"We picked the flowers early in the morning and after putting them up in bunches of 50 each carried them at once to the florist. For our October crop we received only 40 cents a hundred and in November 55 cents.

"During October we built our first greenhouse. It was 60x20 feet and by helping with the work in every possible way we managed to reduce the cost from $80, the first estimate given by the carpenter, to $55.

"The plants were lifted from the frame and set in beds in this greenhouse early in November and so well did we do the work that none of them stopped blooming. At Christmas we picked nearly 4,000 blossoms, which we sold at 90 cents a hundred. As our greenhouse had been built on borrowed money you can imagine how glad we were over this particular sale."

BELLBOY GIVEN $50,000 TIP

Patient Attention to Invalid Woman in San Francisco Hotel Brings Big Reward.

San Francisco.—That Dame Fortune bestows her gifts on the deserving is shown by the experiences of Michael Dunphy, a bellboy at the Argonaut hotel. Last February Mrs. M. M. Potter of Salem, Mass., being sick and nervous, was the bane of the bellboys while she stopped at the hotel. The task of looking after her fell to Mike Dunphy. He accepted the work gracefully and performed his duties in an exceptional manner. When Mrs. Potter left she gave him a check for $100, with a note of appreciation. About two weeks ago Dunphy received a letter from Brown & Corlysle, lawyers of Boston, saying that Mrs. Potter had died and left him $2,500. They inclosed a check for that amount.

Dunphy bought a home for his parents and sent them to Denver for a trip. When the lawyers heard how the boy had disposed of the money they wrote him saying that Mrs. Potter left a further provision in her will to the effect that if the boy disposed of his check wisely he was to have a balance of $47,500, making the total amount $50,000. The letter further declares that the lad may draw on the law firm for the money.

Parrot Gives Fire Alarm.

Chester, Pa.—The screeching of a parrot averted what might have resulted in a destructive fire. The bird, which occupies a cage in Horace Drake's drug store, noticed smoke issuing from the window of Samuel Rigney's store, on the corner. Realizing that the smoke meant danger the parrot began to shriek at a lively rate. Several young men in a cigar store near by rushed out to ascertain the cause of the commotion and saw the smoke. Securing an ax they broke open the door and managed, after considerable difficulty, to extinguish the flames.

Many Matches Each Minute

Three Million Are Struck Every Minute, and Fifteen Billion During Entire Year.

Washington.—By the end of the brief minute taken to read these paragraphs the notions of the civilized world will have struck off 3,000,000 matches. This is the average for every minute of the 24 hours of the day. Fifteen hundred billion is the enormous number for the entire year, and those living under the American flag are said to be responsible for the consumption of one-half of this amount.

The importance of the industry which turns out the little splinters of wood, tipped with sulphur or some other material ignited by friction, is only recognized when the average smoker tries to contemplate his predicament if he had to go back to the time when he had to coax a spark from a tinder box. Of course, the answer is, he would smoke a great deal less because of the difficulty in getting a light, or else, on the other hand, smoke continuously in order to keep alive the fire at the end of his stogie or Havana, pipe or cigarette, as the case might be.

Small and insignificant as it is, the match demands perhaps as much attention in the choice of the wood going into its manufacture as any other forest product. Only the choicest portions of the best trees are suitable. Sapwood, knotty or cross-grained timber will not do. Instead of being a by-product of other articles of manufacture the little match is turned out at hundreds of mills over the country where the by-products are bulky objects like doors, sash, shingles, siding, posts and cordwood. The pines, linden, aspen, white cedar, poplar, birch and willow are the most suitable match timbers.

The match makers—not the matrimonial kind—are already finding that the amount of choice timber available is dwindling. Forest conservation, if applied to the holdings of the match companies, like it is on Uncle Sam's national forests in the west, will do much to make the supply sufficient for a longer number of years than would be the case if the old-time wasteful lumbering methods of a few years ago should continue. The rapid increase in stumpage prices is one of the chief factors in encouraging the wise use of the forests where suitable match timber is available.

Canada Likes U. S. Settler.

New York.—"Both Canada and the United States are approaching the greatest era of prosperity in their history," said Sir Thomas George Shaughnessy, president of the Canadian Pacific railroad, as he sailed for Europe.

"The two nations should work together, and Canada stands ready to consider any proposals from the United States looking to the signing of a reciprocity treaty between the two countries.

"We are getting thousands of your people from the northwestern states, and they are becoming permanent residents and loyal Canadians. The Dakota farmer becomes an active Canadian citizen in a very short time."

Boy Hero Gets Medal.

London.—"This is the proudest moment of my life—to be able to honor such a young hero."

Such was the remark of the mayor of Preston at the police court in presenting a Royal Humane certificate for saving four lives to Rowland Mitchell, aged 13, of Ashton-on-Ribble. Mitchell had also brought another person out of the canal, but life was extinct.

The mayor shook hands heartily with the lad and hoped he would live to be still more useful.

Army's Needs in '62 Shown

Musty Documents in Old Rusty Tin Box in New York Safety Vault Throw Light.

New York.—In a rusty tin box which had reposed undisturbed in the vaults of the subtreasury here since the civil war a number of musty, old documents of great historical importance have just been discovered. They will be gone over carefully by experts and preserved either here or in Washington.

One of the more interesting documents is a record which shows to what expedients the government was sometimes compelled to resort to obtain funds with which to defray the expenses of the army during the civil war. Through this paper 50 New York bankers turned over to the government on a single day's notice the sum of $1,200,000.

At that time the document says, the success or failure of the northern army seemed to depend on a speedy moving forward of the sinews of war. The paper bears the date of November 11, 1862.

BAG EVERY VARIETY OF GAME

Washington Hunters Capture Five Bears South of Spokane, Also Pine Marten, Rare Animal.

Spokane, Wash.—C. C. Miller and W. W. Herndon of Dayton, Wash., who have just returned from a hunting and trapping trip of three months in the Blue mountains, south of Spokane, succeeded in bagging specimens of every wild animal native to that part of the northwest. They also had numerous adventures, but none was injured in the encounters with predatory animals. They captured five bears, including two of the largest ever seen in the mountains; two foxes, two lynx, a pine marten, four mountain lions, several raccoons and other smaller animals.

The marten is the first ever seen in the Blue mountains. The collection is valued at several thousand dollars, but is not for sale. Mr. Miller says he has not heard what luck Col. Roosevelt had in Africa.

"But," he added, "if the former president wants some exciting sport in a district probably more isolated than where he is now, I would urge him to pay us a visit."

Mill Finally Closed.

Truckee, Cal.—The last log was sawed by the Truckee Lumber Company at this place the other day and its big mill closed down after more than forty years of profitable industry. It had cut millions of feet of lumber and had denuded a vast area of the mountains of immense forests of pine. Thousands of men have been employed here by this company, and it has operated many miles of railroad into its forests.

The mill is to be dismantled and moved to Oroville, where the company next season will begin sawing logs from the vast virgin forests along the Western Pacific railway.

Letter in the Rivet Keg.

There have been romances and romances, but the latest undoubtedly is the romance of a keg of steel rivets. The outcome of this is being eagerly awaited by 150 men employed at the plant of an iron company at Conshohocken.

The keg arrived at the plant yesterday. When the head was off the workman was surprised to see on top of the commonplace rivets an envelope addressed in a pretty, girlish hand, "To the one who opens this keg."

The ironworker called a comrade or two and they opened the note and read, written on a dainty bit of paper, a few sentences which asked the finder to communicate with the writer. A girl's name was signed at the bottom, above an address in a Massachusetts town.

The finder of the note told others about it and they in turn spread the news until nearly every one at the plant heard it. One hundred and fifty men wrote to the fair correspondent last night, some sending letters and others picture postcards.—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

Increased Price of Elk Teeth.

"During the last five years the value of elk teeth has more than trebled," said a western traveler at the Frederic, according to the St. Paul Dispatch. "In 1904 you could get any number of fine specimens in Idaho, Montana, Washington and bordering states for $2.50 apiece. Now you will pay from $7.50 to $10, and they are hard to get for even that. The Apache, Sioux, Comanche and Chippewa Indians used to have dozens of them in their possession and traded them for trinkets. But the redskin got wise to their value, and you can buy them from a regular dealer cheaper now than from the Indian. The passing of the elk and the great demand made by the members of the Elk lodge for teeth for emblems have boosted the price."

The traveler recited an incident of an Oklahoman who bought a robe covered with elk teeth from a Wichita Indian for $100. He cut off the teeth and cleaned up $2,200 on the deal.

Happiness in marriage would be more prevalent if a man would handle his wife as tenderly and carefully as he does an old briar pipe.

Boy's Lucky Find.

A remarkable book find by a poor Jewish youth in Whitechapel, London, England, is reported, which argues an eye for books and a business intelligence of a high order. He bought for a cent from a barrow in Mile End Road a copy of Goethe's poems, enriched with Thackeray's signature and crest and a number of his thumb-nail sketches scattered throughout the book. The covers were in bad condition, but the pages were clean. The youth had the shrewdness to make the most of his find himself, and after many negotiations he has now sold the volume for about $100.

French Taxes.

According to statistics of taxes, while there were 94,123 billiard tables in France in 1892, in 1905 there were only 89,230, whereas if the game were holding its own the number should have increased as the children grew to billiard playing age. The decadence of the game, which has had famous votaries, is ascribed to the success of outdoor sports, and especially to the intense and widespread interest now taken in motoring.—Vogue.

A Lesson in Economy.

Golfer to Honored.

It was agreed at a committee meeting held in St. Andrews to erect a bronze panel representing the head and shoulders in life size of the late Tom Morris. The panel will be placed in the west gable of the royal and ancient clubhouse. The balance of the memorial fund after paying the expenses for this erection will be used to endow a bed in St. Andrew's Cottage hospital to be known as the Tom Morris bed and upon which golf professionals and caddies are to have first claim.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Woman Would Be Legislator.

Miss Gina Krog, of Christiania, has been nominated by the radical party of Norway for deputy in the parliamentary elections now pending. Miss Krog visited the United States last spring on her way to the International Council of Women in Toronto. She delivered several lectures to suffrage societies in New York and spoke to the Norwegian women in Brooklyn. She is said to have had more to do with obtaining the ballot for the women of Norway than any other individual, men or women.

Knowledge Enough.

At the moment of their fall Adam and Eve, being innocent, were used to doing things in an unconscious manner.

That is to say, they didn't Fletcherize.

With the result that they failed of getting the full effect of the apple—all the proteids and carbohydrates.

However, in their blind, blundering way, they attained to enough knowledge of good and evil to make them terrible bores to themselves forever after, and to all their descendants likewise unto the present generation.—Puck.

Tomato Bread.

Bakers are not perhaps generally aware that up to a certain point tomatoes can be used with advantage in the manufacture of a bread that has the fine flavor of the fruit, with its stimulating and nourishing propensities; while besides, the bread will keep longer and moister than ordinary bread.

The bread has the characteristic color of the tomato. All that is required is that the tomato mash, after being submitted to a sterilizing temperature, should be carefully screened through a sieve and then used as part of the mixture.

New Chair in Rome University.

A chair in Christian archeology has been established in the University of Rome, by direction of the minister of education, and Prof. Marucci has been appointed as its first occupant. "Marucci, whose entry into the faculty has created much excitement in church circles, is known as the best informed archeologist of the Vatican," says Figaro, "and the only surviving pupil of Rossi, who made the catacombs a life study."

Interesting Information.

In an interview published in the Kieler Neueste Nachrichten, Grossadmiral von Koster says many interesting things about his visit to New York, among them the following: "In the absence of President Taft, who was away on a trip to the Mexican frontier, the place of honor was taken by the vice-president of the United States, Secretary of State Sherman of New York."

Don't Weep At The Ice House.

Some people swell up on "emotion" brewed from absolute untruth.

It's an old trick of the leaders of the Labor Trust to twist facts and make the "sympathetic ones" "weep at the ice house." (That's part of the tale further on.)

Gompers et al sneer at, spit upon and defy our courts, seeking sympathy by falsely telling the people the courts were trying in depriving them of free speech and free press.

Men can speak freely and print opinions freely in this country and no court will object, but they cannot be allowed to print matter as part of a criminal conspiracy to injure and ruin other citizens.

Gompers and his trust associates started out to ruin the Bucks Stove Co., drive its hundreds of workman out of work and destroy the value of the plant without regard to the fact that hard earned money of men who worked, had been invested there.

The conspirators were told by the courts to stop these vicious "trust" methods, (efforts to break the firm that won't come under trust rule), but instead of stopping they "dare" the courts to punish them and demand new laws to protect them in such destructive and tyrannical acts as they may desire to do. * * * The reason Gompers and his band persisted in trying to ruin the Bucks Stove Works was because the stove company insisted on the right to keep some old employees at work when "de union" ordered them discharged and some of "de gang" put on.

Now let us reverse the conditions and have a look.

Suppose the company had ordered the union to dismiss certain men from their union, and, the demand being refused, should institute a boycott against that union, publish its name in an "unfair list," instruct other manufacturers all over the United States not to buy the labor of that union, have committees call at stores and threaten to boycott if the merchants sold anything made by that union. Picket the factories where members work and slug them on the way home, blow up their houses and wreck the works, and even murder a few members of the boycotted union to teach them they must obey the orders of "organized Capital?"

It would certainly be fair for the company to do these things if lawful for the Labor Trust to do them.

In such a case, under our laws the boycotted union could apply to our courts and the courts would order the company to cease boycotting and trying to ruin these union men. Suppose thereupon the company should sneer at the court and in open defiance continue the unlawful acts in a persistent, carefully laid out plan, purposely intended to ruin the union and force its members into poverty. What a howl would go up from the union demanding that the courts protect them and punish their law-breaking oppressors. Then they would praise the courts and go on earning a living protected from ruin and happy in the knowledge that the people's courts could defend them.

How could any of us receive protection from law-breakers unless the courts have power to, and do punish such men?

The court is placed in position where it must do one thing or the other—punish men who persist in defying its peace orders or go out of service, let anarchy reign, and the more powerful destroy the weaker.

Peaceful citizens sustain the courts as their defenders, whereas thieves, forgers, burglars, crooks of all kinds and violent members of labor unions, hate them and threaten violence if their members are punished for breaking the law. They want the courts to let them go free and at the same time demand punishment for other men "outside de union" when they break the law. * * * Notice the above reference to "violent" members of labor unions. The great majority of the "unheard" union men are peaceable, upright citizens. The noisy, violent ones get into office and the leaders of the great Labor Trust know how to use this kind of men, in labor conventions and thus carry out the leaders' schemes, frequently abhorrent to the rank and file; so it was at the late Toronto convention.

The paid delegates would applaud and "resolute" as Gompers wanted, but now and then some of the real workingmen insist on being heard, sometimes at the risk of their lives.

Delegate Egan is reported to have said at the Toronto convention:

"If the officers of the federation would only adhere to the law we would think a lot more of them."

The Grand Council of the Provincial Workingmen's Ass'n of Canada has declared in favor of severing all connections with unions in the U. S., saying "any union having its seat of Gov't in America, and pretending to be international in its scope, must fight industrial battles according to American methods. Said methods have consequences which are abhorrent to the law-abiding people of Canada involving hunger, misery, riot, bloodshed and murder, all of which might be termed as a result of the practical war now in progress in our fair province and directed by foreign emissaries of the United Miners of America."

That is an honest Canadian view of our infamous "Labor Trust."

A few days ago the daily papers printed the following:

(By the Associated Press.))

Washington, D. C., Nov. 10.—Characterizing the attitude of Samuel Gompers, John Mitchell and Frank Morrison of the American Federation of Labor in the contempt proceedings in the courts of the District of Columbia, in connection with the Bucks' Stove and range company, as "a willful, premeditated violation of the law," Simon Burns, general master workman of the general assembly, Knights of Labor, has voiced a severe condemnation of these three leaders. Mr. Burns expressed his confidence in courts in general and in those of the District of Columbia in particular.

APPROVED BY DELEGATES.

This rebuke by Burns was in his annual report to the general assembly of his organization. He received the hearty approval of the delegates who heard it read at their annual meeting in this city.

"There is no trust or combination of capital in the world," said Mr. Burns, "that violates laws oftener than do the trust labor organizations, which resort to more dishonest, unfair and dishonorable methods toward their competitors than any trust or combinations in the country."

Mr. Burns said the action of "these so-called leaders" would be harmful for years to come whenever attempts were made to obtain labor legislation.

"The Labor Digest," a reputable workingman's paper, says, as part of an article entitled "The beginning of the end of Gompersism, many organizations becoming tired of the rule-or-ruin policies which have been enforced by the president of the A. F. of L."

"That he has maintained his leadership for so long a time in the face of his stubborn clinging to policies which the more thoughtful workingmen have seen for years must be abandoned, has been on account partly of the sentimental feeling on the part of the organizations that he ought not to be deposed, and the unwillingness of the men who were mentioned for the place, to accept a nomination in opposition to him. In addition to this, there is no denying the shrewdness of the leader of the A. F. of L., and his political sagacity, which has enabled him to keep a firm grip on the machinery of the organization, and to have his faithful henchmen in the positions where they could do him the most good whenever their services might be needed.

"Further than this, he has never failed, at the last conventions, to have some sensation to spring on the convention at the psychological moment, which would place him in the light of a martyr to the cause of unionism, and excite a wave of sympathetic enthusiasm for him, which would carry the delegates off their feet, and result in his re-election.

"That his long leadership, and this apparent impossibility to fill his place has gone to his head, and made him imagine that he is much greater a man than he really is, is undoubtedly the case, and accounts for the tactics he has adopted in dealing with questions before congress, where he has unnecessarily antagonized men to whom organized labor must look for recognition of their demands, and where labor measures are often opposed on account of this very antagonism, which would otherwise receive support.

"There is no doubt but what organized labor in this country would be much stronger with a leader who was more in touch with conditions as they actually exist, and who would bring to the front the new policies which organized labor must adopt if it expects to even maintain its present standing, to say nothing of making future progress."

We quote portions of another article, a reprint, from the same labor paper:

"Organized labor, through its leaders, must recognize the mistakes of the past if they expect to perpetuate their organizations or to develop the movement which they head. No movement, no organization, no nation can develop beyond the intellects which guide these organizations, and if the leaders are dominated by a selfish motive the organization will become tinged with a spirit of selfishness, which has never appealed to mankind in any walk of life at any time since history began.

"It can be said in extenuation of certain leaders of organized labor that the precarious position which they occupy as leaders has had a tendency to cause them to lose sight of the object behind the organization. The natural instinct in man for power and position is in no small measure responsible for the mistakes of the leaders, not necessarily in labor unions alone, but in every branch of society. This desire for power and leadership and personal aggrandizement causes men who have been earnest and sincere in their efforts in the start to deteriorate into mere politicians whose every act and utterance is tinged with the desire to cater to the baser passions of the working majority in the societies or organizations and this is undoubtedly true when applied to the present leaders of the Federation of Labor. We mention the Federation of Labor particularly in this article, because that organization is the only organization of labor which has yet found itself in direct opposition to the laws of the land. There are other organizations of labor whose leaders have made mistakes, but they have always kept themselves and their organizations within the bounds of the law and respected the rights of every other man in considering the rights of themselves and their constituency; whereas, the motto of the Federation is just the reverse, and unless the leaders conform themselves and their organization in accordance with the laws of the land, the leaders and the organization itself must be disintegrated and pass into history, for in America the common sense of mankind is developed to a greater extent than in any other nation on the earth, and the people, who are the court of last resort in this country, will never allow any system to develop in this country which does not meet with the approval of the majority of the citizens of the country.

"This must have forced itself upon the leaders of the Federation by this time. If it has not, the leaders must be eliminated. The organization which they head has done many meritorious things in times past and the people are always ready and willing to acknowledge the benefits which their efforts have brought to their constituency as a whole, but at the present time labor organizations in general, and the Federation of Labor in particular, stand before the bar of public opinion, having been convicted of selfishness and a disposition to rule all the people of the country in the interest of the few. The people are patient and awaiting to see if the object lesson which they have been forced to give to these leaders is going to be recognized and if they are going to conform themselves and their future work and actions in accordance thereto."

Let the people remember that comment, "The Federation of Labor in particular stands before the bar of public opinion having been convicted of selfishness and a disposition to rule all the people of the country in the interest of the few."

The great 90 per cent of Americans do not take kindly to the acts of tyranny of these trust leaders openly demanding that all people bow down to the rule of the Labor Trust and we are treated to the humiliating spectacle of our Congress and even the Chief Executive entertaining these convicted law-breakers and listening with consideration to their insolent demands that the very laws be changed to allow them to safely carry on their plan of gaining control over the affairs of the people.

The sturdy workers of America have come to know the truth about these "martyrs sacrificing themselves in the noble cause of labor" but it's only the hysterical ones who swell up and cry over the aforesaid "heroes," reminding one of the two romantic elderly maids who, weeping copiously, were discovered by the old janitor at Mt. Vernon.

"What is it ails you ladies?"

Taking the handkerchief from one swollen red eye, between sobs she said:

"Why we have so long revered the memory of George Washington that we feel it a privilege to come here and weep at his tomb."

"Yas'm, yas'm, yo' shore has a desire to express yo' sympathy but yo' are overflowin' at da wrong spot, yo' is weepin' at de ice house."

Don't get maudlin about law-breakers who must be punished if the very existence of our people is to be maintained.

If you have any surplus sympathy it can be extended to the honest workers who continue to earn food when threatened and are frequently hurt and sometimes killed before the courts can intervene to protect them.

Now the Labor Trust leaders demand of Congress that the courts be stripped of power to issue injunctions to prevent them from assaulting or perhaps murdering men who dare earn a living when ordered by the Labor Trust to quit work.

Don't "weep at the Ice House" and don't permit any set of law-breakers to bully our courts, if your voice and vote can prevent. Be sure and write your Representatives and Senators in Congress asking them not to vote for any measure to prevent the courts from protecting homes, property and persons from attack by paid agents of this great Labor Trust.

Let every reader write, and write now.

Don't sit silent and allow the organized and paid men of this great trust to force Congress to believe they represent the great masses of the American people. Say your say and let your representatives in Congress know that you do not want to be governed under new laws which would empower the Labor Trust leaders with legal right to tell you when to work, Where! For whom! At what price! What to buy! What not to buy! Whom to vote for! How much you shall pay per month in fees to the Labor Trust! etc., etc., etc.

This power is now being demanded by the passage of laws in Congress. Tell your Senators and Representatives plainly that you don't want them to vote for any measure that will allow any set of men, either representing Capital or Labor to govern and dictate to the common people, who prefer to be free to go and come, work or not, and vote for whom they please.

Every man's liberty will disappear when the leaders of the great Labor Trust or any other trust can ride rough shod over people and make their forces to prevent our courts from affording protection.

"There's a Reason."

Are Doctors Any Good?

Foolish question! Yet some people act as if a medicine could take the place of a doctor! The best medicine in the world cannot do this. Have a family doctor, consult him frequently, trust him fully. If we did not believe doctors endorsed Ayer's Cherry Pectoral for coughs and colds, we would not offer it to you. Ask your doctor. No alcohol in this cough medicine. J. C. Ayer Co., Lowell, Mass.

If we did not believe doctors endorsed Ayer's Pills for constipation, biliousness, sick-headache, we would not offer them to you. Ask your own doctor about this.

OFFICIAL PAPER RED LAKE FALLS CITY

Going back to farm is not always a pleasant prospect—but Mr. Furlong has a "model" farm.

The call for John Lind for Governor becomes more insistent as the campaign approaches. The state needs in its service such men as Lind.

The newspaper boys are glad to see Carlos Avery back to the sanctum of the Hutchinson Leader. He made an admirable public official, just as he was always an admirable editor, and his services to the pub lic is just as valuable in the latter capacity.

John Eastman seems to be considerably worried over Red Lake county affairs for a man who intends to secede. Although Red Lake county will miss John we are glad to be assured that he intends to keep his town in Minnesota and the United States.

The Manitoba government will take charge of all the grain elevators in the province. Government ownership of public utilities is getting to be a live question up there, and our own country can profit by the experience of our northern neighbors.

The Northfield News has burned its bridges, bolting Governor Eberhart and declaring that it cannot support Republican candidates who do not profess county option, railroad regulation and other reforms advocated by the progressive Republicans. There's trouble brewing.

While they're discussing candidates for state office the Democrats might go farther and fare much worse than by naming C. F. McDonald of St. Cloud for lieutenant governor. Here's a man that the railroads, the brewers nor any other "interest" could dominate or control.

C. F. McDonald has just passed his thirty-fifth anniversary as editor of the St. Cloud Times, and all his friends join in felicitations. Mac has been one of the strongest editorial writers the state ever produced, and his ability, honesty and independence have marked him as one of the ablest of the profession. May he be spared many years of further service.

Robert J. Wells of Breckenridge is out as a candidate for state auditor. This complicates the Ninth district situation somewhat, for with two candidates for treasurer, one for lieutenant governor and one for auditor the district is not to become so divided that none of them will land.

The state fair ought to have been taken out of politics long ago, and perhaps the fight for the presidency last week will be a lesson to the real friends of this institution. The Furlong program contemplated making the fair an adjunct to the Republican organization, and it is not surprising that the opponents of this plan combined to defeat it. Mr. Underwood, the successful candidate, is a Republican, it is true, but his loyalty will be to the fair rather than to any political organization.

"Revolt is in the very air." observes the Detroit Record. If you do not incline to this belief after a thorough digesting of the dispatches from Washington and St. Paul, you are indeed an optimist of the highest grade. The session of the national law-makers gives all promise of being the warmest ever held since the civil war, and the meeting of the agricultural society at St. Paul is running a close second. Oh, yes, things are some lively in this great and glorious land of the brave and the free.

The people of Minnesota will not forget that only two of their congressmen, Davis and Hammond, voted against the unspeakable Canon, says the Hutchinson Leader. The other fellows heard the angry roar from their constituents and timorously voted against the tariff bill, not because they wanted to but because they didn't relish the prospect of being hung in effigy. Minnesota has further use for Davis and Hammond. They are made of the stuff that dares to do right and t' 'ell with the consequences.

Norman E. Mack of the Democratic national committee in ordering "Governor Johnson's Life," wrote to Frank A. Day, as follows: "The story of his life, together with his state papers, public speeches, etc., will find a welcome place in my home library. It should be in every public and private library in the land, for the example set by John Albert Johnson might well be emulated from one end of the land to the other, and that the future may know the man as well as we of the present knew him, will, I am sure, be a loving task to those who are engaged in writing the history of his life."

Unconfirmed rumor has it that a Jefferson Day dollar dinner will be given at St. Paul on April 13th for the Democrats of Minnesota, and that this will be the opening gun of the Democratic campaign in this state. It is said that among the speakers will be former Governor John Lind, Congressman W. S. Hammond of St. James, Judge C. W. Stanton of International Falls, Frank A. Day, and others. The price for the dinner is truly Democratic, and the list of speakers is such that every Democrat in the state who has the price of a ticket to St. Paul and return, will be tempted to take a day or two off and mix in with the bunch.

EXCHANGE ECHOES.

Little Falls Herald: Bradstreet's says the cost of living in the United States increased 11 per cent on the average on ninety-six commodities during the year ending Dec. 1, 1909. In some things the advance was very great. The problem is certainly becoming a serious one. A Des Moines standpat paper says the reason is that people who once bought a $15 over coat now insist on having one that costs $35. The New York Post well answers this by saying that the trouble is that the coat once sold at $15 now sells at $35. That appears to be the nub of it all.

Browns Valley Tribune (Rep.): The "senatorial combine" has its Republican slate all made for the next state ticket. The eleven hundred delegates to be chosen later will have little else to do but go down to St. Paul and listen to the acceptance speeches; provided, of course, that the "senatorial com bine" program is carried out.

Wabasha Herald: With Cannon and Aldrich in control of the servile legislative body, with a president who tries to justify an iniquitous tarriff bill, who favors a central bank and smiles benignly on a ship subsidy, who attempts to discourage congressional investigations of trusts and sides with a Ballinger as against a Pinchot. the country at large has little to expect from Washington in the New Year.

Wadena Pioneer Journal: Perhaps it escaped the attention of the local Woman's Twentieth Century club that Thomas Edison, the great electrician and wizard inventor, recently remarked that the first talking machine was made from the rib of a man. We would not assume to point out for the club a proper course of procedure, but if the wizard is correctly quoted, we should say it would be in strict harmony with the occasion for some member to remark that "he was a mean old thing, anyway."

Fairmont Sentinel: Hon. John Lind is quoted as saying recently: "Mr. Hammond makes the strongest tariff speech I ever heard." When it is known that Mr. Lind was a member of congress during all the debates on the McKinley bill the force of his compliment will be appreciated.

Hutchinson Leader: There is just one man who, beyond all shadow of doubt, can, if he'll say the word, be the next governor of Minnesota and that man is John Lind. It makes no difference who runs against him, he'll be elected. The people know him and trust him.

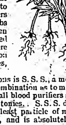
S.S.S. PURELY VEGETABLE



It is a generally recognized fact that medicines taken from the botanical kingdom are better adapted to the delicate human system, and safer in every way, than those composed of strong mineral mixtures.

In the early settlement of this land, our forefathers were obliged to procure their medicines from Nature's great laboratories of forest and field. They searched out and compounded the different vegetable materials into teas, concoctions and medicines. That these pioneers found the most potent and valuable of the roots, herbs and barks placed at their disposal, is abundantly proven by the fact that the great majority of them were blessed with rugged health. They cured their diseases and were enabled to do the great preliminary work of civilization because the remedies they used were Nature's remedies, and specially adapted to the needs of humanity.

Among the very best of these vegetable preparations is S. S. S., a medicine made entirely of roots, herbs and barks in such combination as to make it the greatest of all blood purifiers and the finest of all tonics. S. S. S. does not contain the least particle of mineral in any form, and is absolutely a safe medicine for any one to use.

While purifying the blood this great vegetable remedy builds up and strengthens every portion of the system. S. S. S. cures Rheumatism, Catarrh, Sores and Ulcers, Malaria, Scrofula, Skin Diseases, Contagious Blood Poison, hereditary taints, and all other diseases and disorders caused by impure or polluted blood.

As a tonic S. S. S. is unequlled. It invigorates every portion of the system, and the healthy blood it creates largely assists in overcoming any derangement of the digestive system. If you are suffering from any blood trouble, or need a tonic to build up your constitution, you could not do better than to take S. S. S., a medicine that is in no degree harmful. Book on the blood and any medical advice free.

CHEMIST FOUND S.S.S. FREE FROM MINERALS.

A few years ago I was taken with Inflammatory Rheumatism. Upon the advice of a friend I decided to try S.S.S. Before allowing me to take it, however, my guardian, who was a chemist, analyzed the remedy, and pronounced it free from potash or mercury. I continued the remedy, and in two months I was cured completely. The cure was permanent, for I have never since had a touch of Rheumatism, though many times exposed to damp and cold weather.

Not Self-Deceiving.

The poet wrote about her shoes,
Described her dainty little twos.
She read, indeed,
But did not very much enthuse.
Of ecstacy she gave scant signs
As she perused the poet's lines.
For well she knew
The little shoes were number nines.

THE DIVA'S RUBY

SYNOPSIS.

Baraka, a Tartar girl, became enamored of a golden bearded stranger who was prospecting and studying herbs in the vicinity of her home in central Asia, and revealed to him the location of a mine of rubies hoping that the stranger would love her in return for her disclosure. They were followed to the cave by the girl's relatives, who blocked up the entrance and drew off the water supply, leaving the couple to die. Baraka's cousin Saad, her betrothed, attempted to climb down a cliff overlooking the mine; but the traveler shot him. The stranger was revived from a water gourd Saad carried, dug his way out of the tunnel, and departed, deserting the girl and carrying a bag of rubies. Baraka gathered all the gems she could carry, and started in pursuit. Margaret Donne (Margarita da Cordova), a famous prima donna, became engaged in London to Konstantin Logotheti, a wealthy Greek financier. Her intimate friend was Countess Leven, known as Lady Maud, whose husband had been killed by a bomb in St. Petersburg, and Lady Maud's most intimate friend was Rufus Van Torp, an American who had become one of the richest men in the world. Van Torp was in love with Margaret, and rushed to London as soon as he heard of her betrothal. He offered Lady Maud $5,000 for her pet charity if she would aid him in winning the singer from Logotheti. Baraka approached Logotheti at Versailles with rubies to sell. He presented a ruby to Margaret. Van Torp bought a yacht and sent it to Venice. He was visited by Baraka in male attire. She gave him a ruby after the American had told her of having seen in the United States a man answering the description of the one she loved. The American followed Margaret to the Bayreuth "Parsifal" festival. Margaret took a liking to Van Torp, who presented her with the ruby Baraka had given him.

CHAPTER VI.

Margaret took Van Torp with her to the performance the next day, after impressing upon him that he was not to speak, not to whisper, not to applaud, not to make any sound, from the moment he entered the theater till he left it for the dinner interval. He was far too happy with her to question anything she said, and obeyed her most scrupulously. Twenty-four hours earlier she would have laughed at the idea that his presence beside her at such a time could be not only bearable, but sympathetic, yet that seemed natural now. The diva and the ex-cowboy, the accomplished musician and the Californian miner, the sensitive, gifted, capricious woman and the iron-jawed money-wolf had found that they had something in common. Wagner's last music affected them in the same way.

Such things are not to be explained, and could not be believed if they did not happen again and again before the eyes of those who know how to see, which is quite a different thing from merely seeing. Margaret's sudden liking for the man she had once so thoroughly disliked had begun when he had whistled to her. It grew while he sat beside her in the darkened theater. She was absorbed by the music, the action, and the scene, and at this second hearing she could follow the noble poem itself; but she was subconscious of what her neighbor felt. He was not so motionless merely because she had told him that he must sit still; he was not so intent on what he heard and saw, merely to please her; it was not mere interest that held him, still less was it curiosity. The spell was upon him; he was entranced, and Margaret knew it.

Even when they left the theater and drove back to the hotel, he was silent, and she was the first to speak. Margaret hated the noise and confusion of the restaurant near the Festival theater.

"You have enjoyed it," she said. "I'm glad I brought you."

"I've felt something I don't understand," Van Torp answered gravely.

She liked the reply for its simplicity. She had perhaps expected that he would summon up his most picturesque language to tell her how much pleasure the music had given him, or that he would perhaps laugh at himself for having been moved; but instead, he only told her that he did not understand what he had felt; and they walked on without another word.

"Go and get something to eat," she said when they reached the hotel, "and I'll meet you here in half an hour. I don't care to talk either."

He only nodded, and lifted his hat as she went up the steps; but instead of going to eat, he sat down on a bench outside, and waited for her there, reflecting on the nature of his new experience.

Like most successful men, he looked on all theories as trash, good enough to amuse clever idlers, but never to be taken into consideration in real life. He never asked about the principle on which any invention was founded; his first and only question was: "Will it work?"

Considering himself as the raw material, and the theater he had just left as the mill, he was forced to admit that "Parsifal" "worked."

Presently Margaret came out of the hotel, expecting to find him waiting for her within the hall, and prepared to be annoyed with him for taking so long over a meal. She stood on the step and looked about, and saw him sitting on the bench at a little distance. He raised his eyes as she came towards him and then rose quickly.

"Is it time?" he asked.

"Yes," she said. "Did you get anything decent to eat?"

"Yes," he answered vaguely. "That is, now I think of it, I forgot about dinner. It doesn't matter."

She looked at his hard face curiously and saw a dead blank, the blank that had sometimes frightened her by its possibilities, when the eyes alone came suddenly to life.

"Won't you go in and get a biscuit, or a sandwich?" she asked after a moment.

"Oh, no, thanks. I'm used to skipping meals when I'm interested in things. Let's go, if you're ready."

"I believe you are one of nature's Wagnerites," Margaret said, as they drove up the hill again, and she smiled at the idea.

"Well," he answered slowly, "there's one thing, if you don't mind my telling you. It's rather personal. Perhaps I'd better not."

The prima donna was silent for a few moments, and did not look at him.

"Tell me," she said suddenly.

"It's this. I don't know how long the performance lasted, but while it was going on I forgot you were close beside me. You might just as well not have been there. It's the first time since I ever knew you that I've been near you without thinking about you all the time, and I hadn't realized it till I was sitting there by myself. I hope you don't mind my telling you?"

"It only makes me more glad that I brought you," Margaret said quietly.

"Thank you," he answered; but he was quite sure that the same thing could not happen again during the second part.

Nevertheless, it happened. For a little while, they were man and woman, sitting side by side and very near, two in a silent multitude of other men and women; but before long he was quite motionless, his eyes were fixed again and he had forgotten her. She saw it and wondered, for she knew how her presence moved him, and as his hands lay folded on his knee, a mischievous girlish impulse almost made her, the great artist, forget that she was listening to the greatest music in the world and nearly made her lay her hand on his, just to see what he would do. She was ashamed of it, and a little disgusted with herself. The part of her that was Margaret Donne felt the disgust; the part that was Cordova felt the shame, and each side of her nature was restrained at a critical moment. Yet when the "Good Friday" music began, she was thinking of Van Torp and he was unconscious of her presence.

It could not last, and soon she, too, was taken up into the artificial paradise of the master-musician and borne along in the gale of golden wings, and there was no passing of time till the very end; and the people rose in silence and went out under the summer stars; and all those whom nature had gifted to hear rightly, took with them, memories that years would scarcely dim.

The two walked slowly back to the town as the crowd scattered on foot and in carriages. It was warm, and there was no moon, and one could smell the dust, for many people were moving in the same direction, though some stopped at almost every house and went it, and most of them were beginning to talk in quiet tones.

Margaret stepped aside from the road and entered a narrow lane, and Van Torp followed her in silence.

"This leads out to the fields," she said. "I must breathe the fresh air. Do you mind?"

"On the contrary."

He said nothing more, and she did not speak, but walked on without haste, dilating her nostrils to the sweet smell of grass that reached her already. In a little while they had left the houses behind them, and they came to a gate that led into a field.

Van Torp was going to undo the fastening, for there was no lock.

"No," she said, "we won't go through. I love to lean on a gate."

She rested her crossed arms on the upper rail and Van Torp did the same, careful that his elbow should not touch hers, and they both stared into the dim, sweet-scented meadow. He felt her presence now and it almost hurt him; he could hear his slow pulse in his ears, hard and regular. She did not speak, but the night was so still that he could hear her breathing, and at last he could not hear the warm silence any longer.

"What were you thinking about?" he asked, trying to speak lightly.

She waited, or hesitated, before she answered him.

"You," she said, after a time.

He moved involuntarily, and then drew a little further away from her, as he might have withdrawn a foot from the edge of a precipice, out of common caution. She was aware of his slight change of position without turning her eyes.

"What made you say what you did to Mrs. Rushmore yesterday afternoon?" she asked.

"About you?"

"Yes."

"She asked me, point-blank, what I thought of Logotheti," Van Torp answered. "I told her that I couldn't give her an unbiased opinion of the man you meant to marry, because I had always hoped to marry you myself."

"Oh—was that the way it happened?"

"Mrs. Rushmore could hardly have misunderstood me," said Van Torp, gathering the reins of himself, so to say, for anything that might happen.

"No. But it sounds differently when you say it yourself."

"That was just what I said, anyhow," answered Van Torp. "I didn't think she'd go and tell you right away, but since she has, I don't regret having said that much."

"It was straightforward, at all events—if it was all true!" There was the faintest laugh in her tone as she spoke the last words.

"It's true, right enough, though I didn't expect that I should be talking to you about this sort of thing to-night."

"The effect on Mrs. Rushmore was extraordinary, positively fulminating," Margaret said more lightly. "She says I ought to break off my engagement at once, and marry you! Fancy!"

"That's very kind of her, I'm sure," observed Mr. Van Torp.

"I don't think so. I like it less and less, the more I think of it."

"Well, I'm sorry, but I suppose it's natural, since you've concluded to marry him, and it can't be helped. I wasn't going to say anything against him, and I wouldn't say anything for him, so there was nothing to do but to explain, which I did. I'm sorry you think I did wrong, but I should give the same answer again."

"Mrs. Rushmore thinks that Konstantin is a designing foreigner because he's a Greek man of business, and that you are perfection because you are an American business man."

"If I'm perfection, that's not the real reason," said Van Torp, snatching at his first chance to steer out of the serious current; but Margaret did not laugh.

"You are not perfection, nor I either," she answered gravely. "You are famous in your way, and people call me celebrated in mine; but so far as the rest is concerned we are just two ordinary human beings, and if we are going to be friends we must understand each other from the first, as far as we can."

"I'll try to do my share," said Van Torp, taking her tone.

"Very well. I'll do mine. I began by thinking you were amusing, when I first met you. Then you frightened me last winter, and I hated you. Not only that, I loathed you—there's no word strong enough for what I felt. When I saw you in the audience, you almost paralyzed my voice."

"I didn't know it had been as bad as that," said Mr. Van Torp quietly.

"Yes. It was worse than I can make you understand. And last spring, when you were in so much trouble, I believed every word that was said against you, even that you had murdered your partner's daughter in cold blood to get rid of her, though that looked as incredible to sensible people as it really was. It was only when I saw how Lady Maud believed in you that I began to waver, and then I understood."

"I'm glad you did."

"So am I. But she is such a good woman herself that nobody can be really bad in whom she believes. And now I'm changed still more. I like you, and I'm sure that we shall be friends, if you will make me one promise and keep it."

"What is it?"

"That you will give up all idea of ever marrying me, no matter what happens, even if I broke—"

"It's no use to go on," interrupted Van Torp, "for I can't promise anything like that. Maybe you don't realize what you're asking, but it's the impossible. That's all."

"Oh, nonsense!" Margaret tried to laugh lightly, but it was a failure.

"No, it's very far from nonsense," he replied, almost sternly. "Since you've spoken first, I'm going to tell you several things. One is, that I accepted the syndicate's offer for the Nickel Trust so as to be free to take any chance that might turn up. It had been open some time, but I accepted it on the day I heard of your engagement. That's a big thing. Another is, that I played a regular trick on Logotheti so as to come and see you here. I deliberately asked him to dine with me last night in London. I went right home, wrote a note to him, antedated for yesterday afternoon, to put him off, and I left it to be sent at the right hour. Then I drove to the station, and here I am. You may call that pretty sharp practice, but I believe all's fair in love and war, and I want you to understand that I think so. There's one thing more. I won't give up the hope of making you marry me while you're alive and I am, not if you're an old woman, and I'll put up all I have in the game, including my own life and other people's, if it comes to that. Amen."

Margaret bent her head a little and was silent.

"Now you know why I won't promise what you asked," said Van Torp in conclusion.

"You have no right to speak like that," she said rather weakly, after a moment.

"Perhaps not. I don't know. But I consider that you have a right to know the truth, and that's enough for me. It's not as if I'd made up my mind to steal your ewe-lamb from you and put myself in its place. Logotheti is not any sort of a ewe-lamb. He's a man, he's got plenty of strength and determination, he's got plenty of money—even what I choose to call plenty. He says he cares for you. All right. So do I. He says he'll marry you. I say that I will. All right again. You're the prize put up for the best of two fighting men. You're not the first woman in history who's been fought for, but, by all that's holy, there never was one better worth, not Helen of Troy herself!"

The last few words came with a sort of stormy rush, and he turned round suddenly, and stood with his back against the gate, thrusting his hands deep into his coat-pockets, perhaps with the idea of keeping them quiet; but he did not come any nearer to her, and she felt she was perfectly safe, and that a much deeper and more lasting power had hold of him than any mere passionate longing to take her in his arms and press his iron lips on hers against her will.

Margaret was not angry; she was hardly displeased, but she was really at a loss what to say, and she said the first sensible thing that suggested itself and that was approximately true.

"I'm sorry you have told me all this. We might have spent these next two days very pleasantly together. Oh, I'm not pretending what I don't feel! It's impossible for a woman like me, who can still be free, not to be flattered when such a man as you cares for her in earnest, and says the things you have. But, on the other hand, I'm engaged to be married to another man, and it would not be loyal of me to let you make love to me."

"I don't mean to," said Van Torp stoutly. "It won't be necessary. If I never spoke again you wouldn't forget what I've told you—ever! Why should I say it again? I don't want to, until you can say as much to me. If it's time to go, hitch the lead to my collar and take me home! I'll follow you as quietly as a spaniel anywhere!"

"And what would happen if I told you not to follow me, but to go home and lie down in your kennel?" She laughed low as she moved away from the gate.

"I'm not sure," answered Van Torp. "Don't."

The last word was not spoken at all with an accent of warning, but it was not said in a begging tone either. Margaret's short laugh followed instantly.

"You said just now that you would not say over again any of those things you have told me to-night. Do you mean that?"

"Yes, I mean it."

"Then please promise that you won't. That's all I ask if you are going to spend the next two days here, and if I am to let you see me."

"I promise," Van Torp answered, without hesitation.

She allowed herself the illusion that she had both done the right thing and also taken the position of command; and he, standing beside her, allowed himself to smile at the futility of what she was requiring of him with so much earnestness, for little as he knew of woman's ways he was more than sure that the words he had spoken that night would come back to her again and again; and more than that he could not hope at present. But she could not see his face clearly.

"Thank you," she said. "That shall be our compact."

To his surprise, she held out her hand. He took it with wonderful calmness, considering what the touch meant to him, and he returned discreetly what was meant for a friendly pressure. She was so well satisfied now that she did not think it necessary to telegraph to Logotheti that he might start at once, though even if she had done so immediately he could hardly have reached Bayreuth till the afternoon of the next day but one, when the last performance of "Parsifal" would be already going on; and she herself intended to leave on the morning after that.

She walked forward in silence for a few moments, and the lights of the town grew quickly brighter.

"You will come in and have some supper with us, of course," she said presently.

"Why, certainly, since you are so kind," answered Van Torp.

"I feel responsible for your having forgotten to dine," she laughed. "I must make it up to you. By this time Mrs. Rushmore is probably wondering where I am."

"Well," said the American, "if she thinks I'm perfection, she knows that you're safe with me, I suppose, even if you do come home a little late."

"I shall say that we walked home very slowly, in order to breathe the air."

"Yes. We've walked home very slowly."

"I mean," said Margaret quickly, "that I shall not say we have been out towards the fields, as far as the gate."

"I don't see any harm if we have," observed Mr. Van Torp indifferently.

"Harm? No! Don't you understand? Mrs. Rushmore is quite capable of thinking that I have already—how shall I say?"—she stopped.

"Taken note of her good advice," he said, completing the sentence for her.

"Exactly! Whereas nothing could be further from my intention, as you know. I'm very fond of Mrs. Rushmore," Margaret continued quickly, in order to get away from the dangerous subject she had felt obliged to approach; "she has been a mother to me, and heaven knows I needed one, and she has the best and kindest heart in the world. But she is so anxious for my happiness that, whenever she thinks it is at stake, she rushes at conclusions without the slightest reason, and then it's very hard to get them out of her dear old head!"

"I see. If that's why she thinks me perfection, I'll try not to disappoint her."

They reached the hotel, went upstairs and separated on the landing to get ready for supper.

On his side of the landing, Mr. Van Torp found Stemp waiting to dress him, and the valet handed him a telegram. It was from Capt. Brown, and had been retelegraphed from London.

"Anchored off Saint Mark's square to-day, 3:30 p. m. Quick passage. No stop. Coaling to-morrow. Ready for sea next morning."

Where Is Bessie Hartman?

Rosenna and Bessie Hartman lived with their mother at Chapman, Nebr., in 1901, the year that their father was killed by a falling tree at Anada, Mo. Their mother, an invalid, being unable to care for them, the girls were sent to Omaha to school, being housed and mothered by a Mrs. Smith.

Finally, in 1903, Bessie, the younger of the two, was taken in charge by the Nebraska Children's Home society, who refused to tell her married sister, Rosenna, where she is. Bessie became of age last February. If she will send her address to P. O. Box 898, Omaha, Nebr., it will be forwarded to her sister Rosanna, who is now Mrs. Geo. Duerr.

Dame Fortune Was Sullen

Man Had Grateful Remembrance of Service, but Was Unable to Repay It.

"When I was a farmer in Illinois," says a representative in congress, "there came to me one day an interesting looking individual, whose face, though he was a stranger in those parts, seemed oddly familiar to me.

"The man had stooped to water his horse. As he waited, he said: 'About ten years ago a poor boy came this way and you took him in.'

"I gazed at the speaker, puzzled.

"'Your kindness to that poor boy was most exceptional,' continued the stranger. 'You fed him, encouraged him, gave him clothes and two dollars and sent him on his way feeling pretty fine. He observed at the time he would never forget your generosity. Do you remember?'

"'Not precisely,' I replied, but I had a vague remembrance of the occurrence.

"'He said,' went on the stranger, 'that if he prospered, he would see that you would never have occasion to regret your kindness to a struggling boy.'

"'Well, well!' I exclaimed, as the full remembrance of the incident came to me in a flash. 'It's like a story, isn't it? You of course, were that boy?'

"'Yes,' said the stranger, 'and as long as I am here, I might as well tell you that I am still poor.'"—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Animals Are Poor Sailors.

The polar bear is the only wild animal that likes a trip on the waves, according to a French scientist who has just studied its behavior at sea. He is quite jolly when aboard ship, but all the other animals violently resent such a voyage and vociferously give vent to their feelings until seasickness brings silence.

The tiger suffers most of all. He whines pitifully, his eyes water continually and he rubs his stomach with his terrible paws. Horses are bad sailors and often die on a sea voyage.

Oxen are heroic in their attempts not to give way to sickness. Elephants do not like the sea, but they are amenable to medical treatment. A good remedy is a bucketful of hot water containing three and a half pints of whisky and seven ounces of quinine.—Fur News.

SILHOUETTES OF WESTERN CANADA

The man from Iowa began to talk land before the train was well out of the C. N. R. depot in Winnipeg. The talk began in rather wide circles. The rush to the land, the bumper crop, the system of summer fallowing pursued in the semi-arid districts, were all discussed, and then, with a sort of apologetic smile, the Iowa man said: 'I'm a bit interested in this country myself. Some of the men down home got a few sections up here along this line, and I'm going to have a look at them. Never been up in Canada before"— (It is curious how these mid-western Americans pronounce the name of the Dominion as if it was "Can'dy")—"but if it looks good we will be up to stay next fall."

"You see, it's like this," said the man from Iowa—quite manifestly continuing an argument that had been going on in his mind for some time. 'Back in our State land has become dear. Anybody wanting to sell can get $70 or $80 an acre for it, and every farm that's offered is snapped up. In Saskatchewan we have just as good land that cost us $11 and $12, so that a man can take up five or six times as much there as in Iowa on the same investment of money.

"It isn't the money, though, that brings most of us up from Iowa. I'm not sure that money would be enough. The 'invasion' is a family affair. We have no chance of keeping our sons around us back home. They have to leave the farm and go into the big cities of the neighboring States to get work. To keep them on the farm and in touch with us, we come up here and make little colonies with the children around us, on homesteads or bought land. This makes it easier for the farmers back there in Iowa to get land for the stay-at-homes. The families that come to Canada are kept together and the families that buy the farms they leave are kept together, too. There won't be any slackening of the rush, either, for they still raise big families back in Iowa."

One could almost see the mental process of this typical American farmer in defending a step that meant a new flag, a new allegiance, a new land, and new associates. To abandon Old Glory of the Declaration of Independence for a good thing in cheap land would hardly be playing the game, but to go out into Saskatchewan to "keep the family together," was another and a quite higher motive.

Why seek too closely to analyze the reasons for the greatest land trek in the history of America? It is enough to know that the sons of the frontiersmen of Iowa, and Kansas, and Minnesota—the best blood of the mid-west—are pouring into the Canadian west in an ever-increasing stream, and are learning that "God Save the King" and "My Country 'Tis of Thee," are sung to the same tune.—Toronto (Ontario) Globe.

RARE KIND OF TREE

Philadelphia Has Handsome Botanical Specimen with History.

Only Few of Gordonia or Franklin in Existence, First Found in Georgia Closely Related to Japanese Species.

Philadelphia.—A rare and handsome tree with a curious history is the Gordonia or Franklin tree, which, owing to the Bartrams, can now be seen in a few Philadelphia gardens.

The tree was first discovered by John Bartram, who, with his son William, was on one of his extensive botanizing expeditions in the southern part of the country, on the Altamaha river in Georgia, near Fort Barrington. Some years afterward, about 1790 or 1791, William Bartram found the tree again in the same locality. He brought a plant and some seeds home and planted them in his father's garden, where, fortunately, they took root and grew.

The tree was of the Gordonia family they perceived, but of an unknown variety, and differing from the Gordonia in numerous respects. The flowers were so beautiful, the tree so handsome, that they felt they must honor it with an appropriate name, so they called it Franklin Altamah, as Franklin was an intimate friend of both father and son.

The curious part of the history of the tree is that it has never been found since, not even in its original locality, though botanists without number have made diligent search where there was the slightest probability of finding it.

The tree is exceedingly difficult to propagate, as it does not perfect its seeds, and all the specimens that are known to be in existence are the descendants of that first tree that grew in Bartram's garden. It is, incidentally the last member of an expiring family.

Audubon mentions the tree and has a picture of it with a bird near by.

Strange to say, it is closely related to a species that is numerous in Japan, and those who believe that in prehistoric ages there was land connection between eastern Asia and our American continent think the Franklin tree is conclusive evidence of the fact that the Pacific ocean is a recent formation and that the Gordonia is a survivor of the age when plant travel over the land was not interrupted by the intervention of a great body of water.

The tree blossoms very freely in late August and early September, the individual flowers lasting only a short time. The withered blossoms have an odor not unlike boiled tea, and the fresh flowers have a delicate and pleasing perfume. There are some fine specimens of the Franklin tree in Germantown and a few in the old gardens of mansions that are now included in Fairmount park.

The late Thomas Meehan, well-known botanist, is responsible for those now in existence. The original tree that grew in Bartram's garden is no longer living, but its descendants which grow to a height of twenty or thirty feet with their beautiful white flowers, are not unlike the camellia. Indeed, the tree is of the same family as the camellia and is well worthy admiration.

WHERE GREAT FRAUDS HAVE BEEN REVEALED

The eyes of the nation have turned of late to the custom house in New York, for it is there that the great frauds perpetrated on the government by the American Sugar Refining Company have come to light. Both President Taft in his message to congress and Secretary of the Treasury MacVeagh in his annual report used vigorous language concerning these gigantic custom swindles, and the investigation into the corruption of employes by the sugar trust is being carried on unrelentingly by William Loeb, collector of the port of New York. Many of the employes already have been discharged and it is believed that many more are yet to fall.

Secretary MacVeagh asserts that inquiry has revealed that the demoralization which has been uncovered in the customs service at New York can be traced largely to two causes—the influence of local politics and politicians, and the evasion of legal duties by Americans returning from abroad.

FROST ALARM BELL

Fruit Trees in Ozarks Supplied with System of Warnings.

When the Cold Begins to Tingle Bells Will Do Likewise, Then Smudges Will Be Automatically Lighted.

Springfield, Mo.—In the evolution of the fruit growing industry in the Ozarks the apple trees may wear bells. This condition is to be brought about in many orchards with the coming of the next season of balmy breezes and blossoms.

The scheme of protecting the buds of the orchards of the south Missouri country by the use of the smudge, with which the ancients were familiar, has grown in popularity in recent years, and in its development there has been devised a system of alarms to be sounded automatically when the temperature in the orchard falls below the danger point, thus enabling the fruit grower to light his lamps and fires and protect the trees with smoke while providing sufficient heat to raise the temperature from 10 to 15 degrees.

An order recently has been placed for 20,000 oil lamps, or stoves, which are to be added to the equipment of the Hazeltine orchards, embracing 2,000 acres and containing 150,000 trees. The Hazeltine orchard represents the growth of an industry founded by Ira Hazeltine, a pioneer who settled in the Ozark country 75 years ago, and who became impressed early in life with the possibilities of this region as a fruit growing country.

Last spring, when the trees of the big orchards were loaded with blossoms and injury and loss by cold and frost was threatened, Mr. Hazeltine tried for the first time in his locality the experiment of burning oil in a sheet iron device. Hundreds of these oil lamps were used and with such effect that the harvest demonstrated in a measure the utility of the experiment. The Hazeltines and others interested in the fruit industry of Greene and adjoining counties expect to give the smudge a more perfect test next spring.

While the owners of the big orchards in this section are seeking to develop on a scientific basis the theories recognized by the pioneers, hundreds of the hill settlers are reaping benefits from the smudge used in a crude way, where fuel is plentiful and where the small farmer's family provides the stumps and brush and wisps of hay to make the dense smoke required and the heat that saves the bloom. The old-time farmer of the hills, however, never heard of the thermostat, or alarm thermometer, that is coming into use and will enable the fruit grower of the future to know with certainty when the temperature reaches the danger point—about 30 degrees above zero.

In the season of probable danger from frost last spring the Hazeltines had 20 men in readiness to respond at a moment's notice throughout the night and day until the danger point was passed.

The efficiency of vapor in connection with fire and smoke has been recognized as an agency in the protection of the bloom of fruit trees from frost damage and the experiments to be carried forward in Ozark orchards next year will take into account the possibilities of vapor as an agent for the preservation of the tender crops. Hundreds of fruit growers throughout the big orchard country of south Missouri are preparing to join in the experiments next spring.

WOODPECKERS TO MAKE WOOD

Aged Maine Naturalist Trains Birds to Transform Ordinary Timber Into Valuable Variety.

Bangor, Me.—After having spent more than sixty years and more than $10,000 in hunting bears and studying the ways of wild creatures, Greenleaf Davis of Mount Katahdin has begun to raise tame woodpeckers with the purpose of using them to convert ordinary rock maples into the rare and costly wood known as bird's-eye maple. Mr. Davis is more than 80.

It has been Mr. Davis' belief that no creature should be kept in captivity more than a month. He has two crows, one more than 30 years old, which have stayed by him and never sought the society of their kind. Two robins lived with him for three years. His great success, however, has been won with woodpeckers, of which he now has nearly 100. Most of them are the red-headed sap suckers, which pick round holes in the bark.

He passed weeks in his grove watching the result of the wounds which the birds inflicted in bark. As the scars healed he noticed that there was a bright red spot left on the wood directly below the wound. It occurred to him that as the markings of bird's-eye maple were due to red spots in the wood, and as nobody had ever been able to account for them, it was possible that this variety might owe its origin to the work of woodpeckers.

from elm bark boiled down to a thick batter he can smear the trunks of thrifty maples with such food as the woodpeckers require, and while they are getting a meal from the bark their bills are boring new holes in the trees and transforming ordinary maple, worth no more than $12 a thousand feet, into bird's-eye maple that sells anywhere from $50 to $00 a thousand.

WOMAN IS DOUGHNUT QUEEN

Noted Maine Buttermaker Fries More Than 5,200 Luscious Cakes in Thirty-Two Days.

Bangor, Me.—Mrs. Lizzie Tarr of Brunswick, noted as a good buttermaker, has gained a new fame. In 32 days, recently, she cooked more than 5,200 doughnuts. She also fed and cared for 15 children and did the housework for herself and husband. Her best recipe is for molasses doughnuts, and is as follows:

One cupful of sour milk, one-half cup New Orleans molasses, one even teaspoonful of ginger, one tablespoonful of salt, one teaspoonful of soda, one egg, four cups of flour and a dash of nutmeg.

"The frying is the most important," she says. "You must not get the lard too hot, or the doughnuts will brown on the outside before they are fully cooked through. When you have put them in the fat they will sink to the bottom and the lard must be hot enough so they will rise quickly to the top. If you can get the real, old New Orleans molasses it will give a wonderfully rich, light color to the doughnuts."

Woman Grows Two-Pound Lemon.

Evansville, Ind.—Mrs. William Thum, residing at 703 Sixth avenue, has grown a lemon three times as large of the ordinary lemon and weighing two pounds.

She planted her tree four years ago and has taken good care of it. Mrs. Thum will use the home-grown lemon to make a large pie and will invite her friends to share it with her.

Students Take Long Walk.

Princeton, N. J.—Two Princeton students, W. C. Belknap and C. G. Dixon, returned to this town the other day after a pedestrian trip, in which they walked from the university to Jersey City, a distance of 50 miles, in a few minutes more than 12 hours. The walk was made on a wager that they could do it in less than eighteen hours.

Hunter Battles With Bear

Attacked While Dressing Deer Carcass in Maine Woods—Bruin Killed After Fierce Fight.

The Forks, Me.—The fourth man to be tackled by a bear in the woods near here recently was Wallace Durgin, who had his adventure the other day near his father's house. Durgin had his rifle close at hand and he made short work of dispatching the brute, but this was not the luck of Ernest Gubtil of New Vineyard. Gubtil had been hunting for moose for two weeks. He droped a fine buck, and then placed his rifle against a tree and began the work of dressing the carcass.

The hunter, knife in hand, was at work when suddenly he received a blow on the left side which sent him to the ground half stunned. Gubtil then found himself grappling with a black bear, which, when cold that evening, weighed 460 pounds

By means of rolling and tumblings, kicking at the bear and warding off attempts to grapple, Gubtil finally, with blood streaming from two dozen bad scratches, reached his rifle. By exerting all his remaining strength Gubtil dropped his muzzle against the bear's breast as the brute rose and pulled the trigger.

The expansion bullet killed the bear almost instantly. At the moment of the discharge the bear was making a blow for Gubtil's face, but the claws dragged against his shoulder.

Gubtil was found, weak from loss of blood and unable to proceed to camp, by Horace Adams, a trapper, who brought him in. Gubtil was taken to the farm and a New York doctor attended him. Horace Adams killed 14 bears this fall and others have killed 11. The local hunters never knew bears to be so ferocious before. The reason for it is ascribed to the lack of wild berries.

WARNS HEIR AGAINST LOAFING

English Millionaire in Disposing of Estate Says Every Man Should Have Definite Occupation.

London.—Strong expression is given to his objection to loafing in a clause of his will addressed to his heirs or any young man who may succeed to his property by Lieut. Col. E. Tufnell of 46 Eaton square, S. W., whose estate was valued for probate at $1,718,120.

Every man should, during his early manhood, at least, he says, "have some definite occupation and lead a useful life," and should not allow himself to be tempted into a "mere loafing and useless existence." He expresses the hope that those who succeed to his property will respect his wishes.

Subject to gifts and legacies and life interests to his wife, he left the bulk of his property to his children.

He is not only idle who does nothing, but he is idle who might be better employed.—Socrates.

A LITTLE COLD.

He caught a little cold—
That was all.
So the neighbors sadly said,
As they gathered round his bed,
When they heard that he was dead.

He caught a little cold—
That was all. (Puck.)

Neglect of a cough or cold often leads to serious trouble. To break up a cold in twenty-four hours and cure any cough that is curable mix two ounces of Glycerine, a half-ounce of Virgin Oil of Pine compound pure and eight ounces of pure Whisky. Take a teaspoonful every four hours. You can buy these at any good drug store and easily mix them in a large bottle.

AT LAST.

Mme. X., the fencing master's wife, finds some pins long enough for her hat.

BOY TORTURED BY ECZEMA

"When my boy was six years old, he suffered terribly with eczema. He could neither sit still nor lie quietly in bed, for the itching was dreadful. He would irritate spots by scratching with his nails and that only made them worse. A doctor treated him and we tried almost everything, but the eczema seemed to spread. It started in a small place on the lower extremities and spread for two years until it very nearly covered the back part of his leg to the knee.

"Finally I got Cuticura Soap, Cuticura Ointment and Cuticura Pills and gave them according to directions. I used them in the morning and that evening, before I put my boy to bed, I used them again and the improvement even in those few hours was surprising, the inflammation seemed to be so much less. I used two boxes of Cuticura Ointment, the same of the Pills and the Soap and my boy was cured. My son is now in his seventeenth year and he has never had a return of the eczema.

"I took care of a friend's child that had eczema on its face and limbs and I used the Cuticura Soap and Ointment. They acted on the child just as they did on my son and it has never returned. I would recommend the Cuticura Remedies to anyone. Mrs. A. J. Cochran, 1823 Columbia Ave., Philadelphia, Pa., Oct. 20, 1909."

Temperamental Toilet Table.

A very aged Englishman many years ago gave this advice to his daughter in a letter as to what a lady's dressing table should contain:

The best beautifier a young lady can use is good humor. The best renovator truth; the best rouge is modesty; the best eyewater is the tears of sympathy; the best gargle for the voice is cheerfulness; the best wash for smoothing wrinkles is contentment; the best cure for deafness is attention; the best mirror is reflection, and the whitest powder is innocence.

Charity by Proxy.

There is an Oregon statesman who is very prudent with his money. He rarely spends anything if he can get some one else to do the spending for him. One morning he was walking down the street with a friend and they met a beggar who had a tale of woe that was amazing. The statesman listened and asked some questions. Then he turned to his friend and said: "John, this man's story affects me greatly. Give him a quarter."—Life.

"Well," responded the American, "we prefer to let a girl select her own ticket."

FAME AND FORTUNE OFFERED

Rich Prize for Man Who Discovers the Long-Sought Cure for Tuberculosis.

Dr. George W. Bloomer of Yale university, acting as spokesman for an anonymous giver, has announced that a prize of $100,000 has been set aside, to be awarded to the first person anywhere in the world who discovers a cure for tuberculosis. The gift is unconditional as to time, place, or kind of cure, the only real condition being that the new cure must have been in constant use at least five years, and that the promoter of the cure convince the investigating board of the merits of his discovery.

A large number of physicians have been working for years to perfect vaccine, or anti-toxin for tuberculosis, or to find some agent, such as tuberculin, which will assist in the cure of the disease. Thus far, the experiments have not furnished a product which will either absolutely cure or prevent consumption, or render the patient immune against the disease. Many of these serums have proved effective in increasing the resistance of the patient and thus helping in the cure, but no scientist of repute to-day claims to have discovered a tuberculin which will produce a cure without the combined aid of fresh air, rest and wholesome food.

Where Are Harry and Isabella Allen?

Harry is now aged 20 years, and his sister, Isabella, aged 18 years. The children were taken in charge by the Nebraska Children's Home society in 1897 from Grand Island, following the death of the father, Silas Allen. The mother is now in Oklahoma, and is distracted because she cannot locate her children, whom she has not seen since they were taken by superintendent of the society twelve years ago, who now refuses to tell their mother where they are. If the children will address P. O. Box 898, Omaha, Nebr., giving their own address, it will be sent to their mother.

For Celestials.

I once visited a very rough boom town in Oregon, near Cottage Grove. In the leading saloon a man in a red shirt said to me:

"Ye wanter carry yerself almighty straight in these parts, stranger. Go wrong the least mite and, by crinus, we'll lynch ye as quick as look at ye."

I smiled.

"Would you lynch me," I asked, "if I killed a dog?"

"Would we?" he snorted. "Why, stranger, we've lynched fellers here for killin' Chinemen!"

Coats of Fire.

One Christmas evening a Sunday school pupil appeared at church, only to be surrounded immediately by a number of deriding playmates.

"She's wearing her sister's coat!" cried one.

"And she's got her brother's gloves on!" cried another.

"Yes," was the retort that turned the tide of ridicule, "and I came with my mother's blessing."—Judge.

WELCOME WORDS TO WOMEN
Women who suffer with disorders peculiar to their sex should write to Dr. Pierce and receive free the advice of a physician of over 40 years' experience—a skilled and successful specialist in the diseases of women. Every letter of this sort has the most careful consideration and is regarded as sacredly confidential. Many sensitively modest women write fully to Dr. Pierce what they would shrink from telling to their local physician. The local physician is pretty sure to say that he cannot do anything without "an examination." Dr. Pierce holds that these distasteful examinations are generally needless, and that no woman, except in rare cases, should submit to them.
Dr. Pierce's treatment will cure you right in the privacy of your own home. His "Favorite Prescription" has cured hundreds of thousands, some of them the worst of cases.
It is the only medicine of its kind that is the product of a regularly graduated physician. The only one good enough that its makers dare to print its every ingredient on its outside wrapper. There's no secrecy. It will bear examination. No alcohol and no habit-forming drugs are found in it. Some unscrupulous medicine dealers may offer you a substitute. Don't take it. Don't trifle with your health. Write to World's Dispensary Medical Association, Dr. R. V. Pierce, President, Buffalo, N. Y.,—take the advice received and be well.

Let's cut him."

"Let's," said Miss Hunter.

"Let's," said every girl in the room but one.

"Are you sure you'll all keep to the agreement?" asked Miss Emerson incredulously.

"What do you take us for?" said Miss Hunter. "You're as bad as Harrington."

"Well, I'll agree," drawled Miss Emerson, "but I don't want any shirking."

"All who agree," said Miss Spencer, "hold up a hand."

Every girl except one held up a lily white hand, with some sort of bangle or bracelet dangling at the wrist. The exception was Miss Emerson.

"Aren't you with us, Emmy?"

"No."

"Why not?"

"I don't believe in judging any one unheard, and I don't believe in conspiracies."

"Very well; do as you please."

That Miss Spencer was determined to keep faith in the matter is proved by the fact that she did not wait for an accidental meeting with the tabooed man. She brought about one the next day. Harrington was accustomed to walk past her home every morning on his way to his office. She had often stood at a front window purposely to get a bow from him, but after the first he did not deign to see her there. On the morning after he had been boycotted Miss Spencer went out on the street a short time before his accustomed passing, met him face to face and cut him dead.

HE WAS OBLIGED TO CATCH HER TO PREVENT HER FALLING.

The next morning Harrington walked by the house as indifferently as before. Miss Spencer was watching for him from behind a curtain. For three successive mornings she was at her post and saw the same indifference. Then she wrote a note to Mr. Harrington telling him that she had declined to speak to him because she had heard something about him to his discredit. If he would call on her she would tell him; she didn't wish to do him an injustice.

Harrington called the same evening. Miss Spencer wore her most becoming costume. She was a pretty girl and had never looked prettier. There was no convenient place for him to sit except next her on the sofa. She told him that some one had maligned him; had said he hated women. He replied that he was not in a position to deny the charge, for he had made such a remark a number of times.

"But you didn't mean it," she said. "Don't say you did, for I know you are a gentleman, and none such would attack the weaker sex."

Harrington saw a pair of beautiful blue eyes looking into his. He felt complimented, and he felt drawn toward Miss Spencer.

"The reason why I condemn women," he said, "is because of their standard of honor, which is far beneath that in vogue among men. But I am open to conviction. If within three months you are able to convince me that women are as honorable as men I will renounce my opposition. Meanwhile I shall see you frequently, and we will go out together.

"Agreed," said Miss Spencer.

Harrington kept his word. He called often and invited her to go out with him. She declined his invitations for places of amusement for fear she would be seen by some of the girls with whom she had made the compact. She knew very well what she would say to them when the time came to say it, but the time had not come.

One day Harrington was about to get off a trolley car. A young lady on the platform blocked his way. She was about to step down into the street when Harrington put a hand on her shoulder and held her back. A second later an automobile driven by a drunken chauffeur grazed the trolley car. Had the girl stepped off, as she intended, she would have surely been killed. The auto having passed, Harrington escorted her to the sidewalk. She seemed quite unconcerned till she reached allotted for his conversion under Miss Spencer's influence and had quite lost his antipathy for women. Indeed, he was beginning to feel that with her for a helpmeet life would assume a rosier hue. He had about made up his mind to tell her so when the trolley car incident occurred. But suddenly Miss Spencer noticed that he was becoming indifferent to her.

The truth is that, being on excellent terms with two women, he was enabled to contrast the one with the other. His trolley car lady appeared friendly, but otherwise indifferent. This revealed to him the fact that Miss Spencer was trying to catch him. The latter redoubled her efforts, but this only tended to make them more apparent and rendered him more appreciative of the girl whom it piqued him to believe felt for him only a natural gratitude for having been the accidental cause of saving her life.

And so it happened that the man who had given a woman an opportunity to prove to him that woman's standard of honor was equal to that of man found himself in an equivocal position. He had gone so far with Miss Spencer that he doubted if he were not in honor bound to g

At any rate, he shrank from what he considered a backing out. When the end of the three months he had given Miss Spencer to convert him came round she had made the conversion, but he had fallen in love with another girl.

Harrington decided to make a clean breast of it to the girl he loved. He told her that he loved her, but before meeting her had become entangled with another girl. Then he confided to her his affair with Miss Spencer. His confidante manifested no surprise. Indeed, she seemed to be cognizant of the whole affair. But she astonished Mr. Harrington by telling him that she could not accept a proposition from him because such a course would place her in an unfortunate position. When he asked her what that position was she declined to inform him on the ground that she could not honorably do so.

Mr. Harrington was astonished. That a woman should decline an offer of marriage on the ground that it would place her in a false position and decline to give that position through motives of honor opened up to him a new thing in the world of morals. He had not been insensible to woman's charms, which he had considered marred by their want of a high sense of honor. Here was a woman with charms and scrupulously honorable. He begged her to put him in the way to get the desired information from another, but she said that such a course would be only a subterfuge and no more honorable than telling him herself.

Nevertheless the information came. Miss Spencer was met one day by Miss Hunter walking with Mr. Harrington, and, looking up at him in the fashion of a woman who means to be seductive, Miss Hunter at once invited the members of the cabal to meet at her house the next day at afternoon tea. Miss Emerson, having declined to cut the victim, was not notified. When they were assembled the hostess announced the perfidy great was the indignation of the "signatory powers." Miss Wadsworth declared that Mr. Harrington should be saved from the wiles of such a girl, and after much deliberation it was decided to send him an anonymous note stating that for the protection of the sex certain girls had decided to cut him, Miss Spencer having made the proposition. The decision had been unanimous except for one girl. The note having been mailed and tea having been drunk, the girls separated.

When Harrington received the note he took it at once to Miss Spencer, telling her his opinion of women who could write such a note. Miss Spencer showed unmistakable signs of guilt and finally in tears confessed her part in the matter.

"Will you inform me," asked Harrington, "who was the girl who declined to enter upon this conspiracy?"

"Irene Emerson," sobbed the culprit.

"Irene Emerson!"

"Yes. Do you know her?"

"I didn't when this boycott was decided on. I had never seen her. Since then it has been my good fortune to have been the accidental cause of her avoiding a serious accident, and in that way I made her acquaintance. I have been converted to the fact that a standard of honor may be lived up to by persons irrespective of sex, but I regret to have to tell you that my conversion has not come through you but the girl who, though she had never seen me, declined to join the conspiracy that you instituted. I beg to bid you good day."

Mr. Harrington called on Miss Emerson as soon as he could reach her after leaving Miss Spencer.

"The secret you were too honorable to betray," he said, "has been revealed to me. I have come to thank you for the noble part you have played and for re-establishing in me that reverence for women which all true women deserve."

There are men friends of Harrington—crusty old bachelors—who are mean enough to insinuate that Miss Emerson played a deep game.

NEW COURT HOUSE WILL BE BUILT

County Commissioners Will Sell Bonds and Let Contract for Building.

Supreme Court Interpretation of the Law Gives Them Full Authority.

At the meeting of the county commissioners held last Saturday, a resolution was adopted providing for the issuance and sale of bonds of the county in the amount of $37,000 for the erection of a court house in Red Lake Falls. Another resolution was adopted providing for the advertisement for bids for the construction of the building according to the plans now on file in the county auditor's office. The advertisement for bids for the contract for constructing the building is published in this issue of the Gazette. The full proceedings of the meeting will be published in the next issue.

The commissioners are acting under authority of Chapter 175, Laws of 1905, which gives the county commissioners the right to issue bonds for the purpose of building a court house in counties not already in possession of such buildings.

The supreme court has recently decided, in the injunction proceedings against the commissioners instituted by Thief River Falls people, that the law is constitutional and that it gives the county commissioners of Red Lake county authority to provide for the erection of a new building.

The commissioners now having this clearly defined authority, decided that the wise thing to do was to recind certain former acts and make a fresh start and this they have done.

The commissioners will meet on February 17 to consider bids on the two propositions and there is no doubt that the bonds will be sold and the contract for the construction of the building awarded so that work may be commenced early in the spring.

Dance and Social.

The Royal Neighbors will give a box social and dance at the Woodman hall Friday evening, Feb. 4. Ladies are requested to bring boxes containing lunches. The boxes will be sold at 75 cents each. There will be no other charge for the dance or social. Coffe and cream will be furnished by the lodge. A general invitation to attend this social affair is extended.

TEACHERS' EXAMINATIONS

Will be Held Next Thursday, Friday and Saturday.

Examinations for teachers' common school certificates will be conducted in Red Lake Falls and Thief River Falls next Thursday, Friday and Saturday, February 3, 4 and 5. On Thursday the examinations will be in first grade subjects and on Friday and Saturday second grade subjects.

A China Shower.

On Monday evening Miss Margarot Rose gave a china shower at her home in honor of Miss Amelia Berget, a bride of the week. The house was prettily decorated with pink and white hearts and two large hearts pierced with a cupid's arrow hung in the arch between the rooms and served as conspicuous reminder of the significance of the occasion.

One of the means of entertainment was a mock wedding, this having been decided upon by some of the guests, it is said, because they desired the experience such a peformance would give them. Miss Elsie Manley was the groom and Miss Jessie Carver was the bride—only in the mock wedding, you know. Miss Rose Harren officiated as the clergyman with becoming dignity. Miss Angelina Guillmette was the best man and Miss Lorena Zaiser was the bridesmaid. Miss Grace Jeffers played the wedding march on the violin. Several contests provided entertainment and prizes were won by Mrs. Geo. F. Hennings and Miss Carrie Patnode. The bride-to-be received many very pretty pieces of chinaware. Before the guests went to their homes Miss Rose served dainty refreshments.

A. P. TOUPIN RESIGNS

Dr. I. Lemieux Elected to Board of Education Vacancy.

A. P. Toupin, whose appointment as register of the U. S. land office at Crookston necessitated his removal from the city, has tendered his resignation as a member of the board of education and as clerk of that body. Mr. Toupin has been a competent official and it was with regret that the board accepted his resignation. Dr. I. Lemieux was elected to the vacancy on the board and was also chosen clerk.

The wedding of Miss Amelia Berget and Mr. Harry Garceau occurred at nine o'clock this morning. The wedding was a quiet affair, being witnessed by only a few relatives. The ceremony was performed at St. Joseph's church, Rev. Fr. Bussua officiating. Following the ceremony a wedding dinner was served at the Garceau residence.

Mr. and Mrs. Garceau left this evening on a wedding trip to Duluth and Minneapolis. Upon their return they will go to housekeeping in the Johnson house, south of the Healy residence, and will be at home to their friends in a few weeks.

Mr. Garceau is teller at the First State Bank and he and his bride are most estimable young people whose large number of friends will be pleased to offer congratulations and best wishes.

SCHOOL INVESTIGATION.

St. Hilaire Boy and Two Others Are Expelled

The controversy over the conduct of the state school for the blind at Faribault has commanded the attention of the public for several days.

Some of the students complained to Governor Eberhart of the treatment they were receiving and this resulted in an investigation and much has been printed in the daily papers about the trouble. The controversy has resulted in the expulsion of three of the boys, one of whom is Arthur Hendrickson of St. Hilaire.

The authorities state that the expulsion of the three boys is not due in any measure to the fact that they complained to the governor of conditions in the school or because some of the boys have informed the daily papers of alleged unsatisfactory conditions. They say the boys have a right to complain of conditions, but that the boys have been guilty of insubordination and that the discipline of the school must be maintained and that the expulsion of the boys was necessary. Many people believe that the authorities have been too harsh in their treatment of the boys. It is no doubt true that boys afflicted as are these students are more sensitive than are people possessed of all their faculties and it may be that some of the wrongs that they insist upon as existing are imaginary. It is also true that the management of a school of this character requires much tact and the expulsion of blind students for any cause should be resorted to only as an extreme measure. No doubt the expulsion of the boys will result in further investigation of the causes that induced the action and of the complaints that have been made by the students.

LIQUOR FAMINE

Liquor Stores at Detroit Are Low on Stock.

An impending liquor famine in Detroit is making the four saloon keepers whom Government Agent W. E. Johnson allows to run there, resort to heroic measures to supply their thirsty patrons.

The railroads learned that they were equally liable with the saloon keepers for introduction of liquor into the Indian reservation, consequently they refused to carry liquor across the reservation lines.

As the stock of drinkables in the four Detroit saloons was not large, quick action was demanded. Arrangements were made to have the liquor put off the trains at Vergas, just outside the reservation. From this little town liquor is transported by sleighs to points within the reservation. This makes the drivers of the sleigh liable, but they are taking a long chance.

OPPOSITION TO STEENERSON

Henry O. Bjorge, of Tonnage Tax Fame, a Candidate for Congress.

Henry Bjorge of Lake Park has announced himself a candidate for congress and will seek the republican nomination in opposition to Congressman Steenerson. Mr. Bjorge is the author of the tonnage tax bill that commanded so much of the attention of the public last winter. One interesting paragraph in Mr. Bjorge's announcement is as follows:

"I am in favor of a legislative program that will carry out to the fullest extent the spirit of the Roosevelt policies. I also favor curbing the power of the reactionary forces now entrenched behind the cloak of Cannonism, to which is already due the enactment of legislation favorable to "Special Interests" to the detriment of the masses. I am in favor of reforming the rules of the lower branch of the national legislature so as to accomplish the abolition of the system that has made Cannonism possible."

New Comet's Orbit.

The daily papers received today state that a message has been received from Harvard College observatory, that Prof. Kobold of Kiel, Germany, has completed the computation of the orbit of the new comet. According to Prof. Kobold the new comet was nearest the sun on Jan. 17, being 4,000,000 miles away. The orbit is inclined 62 degrees to the plane of the earth's orbit. On Feb. 3 the comet will be about one-tenth of the brilliancy shown on Jan. 22. The comet is traveling to the east and north."

Now what do you know about it?

Notice of Sale of Bonds.

Bids are invited for the purchase of said bonds. The board of county commisioners of Red Lake county, Minnesota, will meet at the temporary office of the county auditor of said county, at the Sortedahl building in the city of Red Lake Falls, Minnesota, on the 17th day of February, A. D. 1910, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, to open and consider bids for said bonds, and to negotiate the sale of said bonds.

All bids must be filed with the county auditor at or before the hour of meeting, and be accompanied by a certified check for $500.

The board reserves the right to reject any or all bids, or to invite further bids.

Senior Class Play.

"OH! TUSH!" SAYS GOVERNOR EBERHART

Governor Eberhart Makes Reply to Charges of Former Congressman Heatwole.

Paul Pry Writes a Gossipy Letter About State Politics and Other Things.

[Special Correspondence to Red Lake Falls Gazette.]

St. Paul, Jan. 25. There are two things by which one may judge of what principles or policies will inspire Governor Eberhart's administration. One is what he says; the other is what he does. Incidently it may be remembered that Governor Eberhart talks often; he talks long; he talks like a book.

The Difference.

When the Governor assumed office he made certain professions with regard to his intention to carry out Governor Johnson's administation as Governor Johnson himself would have carried it out if Povidence had not interposed. We will take a concrete instance: the board of appeals for the inspection of grain. This board was originally created to insure to farmers fair play. The complaint made was that in judging grain that farmers did not have proper representation. The grain was practically graded by the buyers and by the commission men who represented the buyers. Hence, when the board of appeals was organized the appointments made by Governor Johnson and his predecessors were such as to inspire the farmers with confidence that at last they would have fair play.

The New Policy.

Possibly that sort of thing had gone far enough. At all events that appears to have been the view which prevailed in the executive office. Possibly the conclusion may have been reached that the wheat buyers were being ill used. At all events the other day when the terms of T. B. McManus of Crookston and S. P. Thorson of Winthrop, both of whom are representative farmers, expired, Governor Eberhart appointed in their room and stead Al. Chambers of Minneapolis and Charles Bryant of Duluth, both of whom have been clerks in the offices of grain commission men and whose training is along that line. It is scarcely necessary to say that in this the policy of Governor Johnson has not been Governor Eberhart's guide.

Another Instance.

Governor Johnson's sympathies with working men were well known. That was clearly indicated by what he said, what he did and by his frequent preference of working men for official positions. Governor Eberhart also sympathises with the horny handed son of toil, when he talks. The other day he reached the conclusion that in their interest, no less than in the interest of the general public, the state board of arbitation which had fallen into innocuous desuetude should be revived, and possibly in that he was right. So he appointed as members of the board a Mr. H. M. Leighton, of Minneapolis, a contractor, as the representative of the employers. To represent the workingmen he appointed H. W. Goetzlinger, of St Paul, a labor leader. To the third position which the law contemplated being occupied without bias, as a sort of arbitrator to hold the balance true, Governor Eberhart appointed John W. Mason, a lawyer from Fergus Falls. The milk in the cocoanut resides in this that, while, on the surface, a lawyer might appear to be just the man to decide where partizans disagree, Mr. Mason is the attorney for the Great Northern railway and the Great Northern railway is the largest employer of labor in the state and has the most trouble with its employees.

Royal Entertainers.

The sheriffs of the state met last week in St. Paul. About forty of them were on the invitation of Sheriff Gerber entertained at a dinner at a down-town restaurant noted somewhat for the elaborate character of its spreads. Arrived there they were presented to E. M. Parish, of St. Paul, late chief clerk to the secretary of state, and informed that the dinner was given at his expense. George Dix was also there, as was Ex-sheriff Ege of Minneapolis. George Dix is a candidate for secretary of state. Ed. Parish is not now in politics—that is the popular phrase—he is in the employ of the Brewers' association succeeding to the duties recently discharged by the Hon. John Selb, and associated with Hon. Derins F. Reese and F. W. Zollman. The advantage of his clients being on good terms with the sheriffs can readily be understood, as also the prestige it will give George Dix and Sheriff Ege in their campaign when it is known that they are the special honored guests of the political agent of the Brewers' association.

IVERSON A CANDIDATE

State Auditor Expresses Desire to Succeed Himself.

State Auditor S. G. Iverson is a candidate for re-election. The Gazette is in receipt of a circular letter from Mr. Iverson in which he announces that he will be a candidate for renomination before the next Republican state convention.

The auditor makes the following formal announcement and then proceeds to recount a number of important state transactions in which he has figured prominently:

"For seven years the work of this department has been in my charge. I deeply appreciate the honor that has been conferred upon me, and the confidence shown by the people. In making this announcement of my candidacy for a renomination it is proper that the people should review my stewardship. It is with a feeling of satisfaction that I refer to a few actual results which have been accomplished, with the assistance of associated officials, during the past seven years.

THE WAY ONE MERCHANT ADVERTISES

Big Results Obtained by Proprietor of Store at Fergus Falls.

The Twin City Commercial Bulletin published a long interview which a representative of that paper had with I. W. Donoven, a leading merchant of Fergus Falls, Minn. Mr. Donoven is proprietor of the Leader Department Store at Fergus Falls. He has been in business just three years and started with an investment of $3,000. Today he carries an immense stock and is doing a big business. He attributes his remarkable success to the well planned advertising campaign that he conducted. A part of the article that appeared in the Commercial Bulletin is published below:

Mr. Donoven started out with an advertising plan. His plan was to spend two and a half per cent of his sales for advertising. Many merchants advertise liberally, but without system. He began by using more newspaper space than all of his competitors in the same line of trade.

The expenditures for advertising by the Leader store for this year will be approximately $2,000. The whole of this amount has been spent for newspaper space which Mr. Donoven deems covers the field so well that the other advertising is not essential. Next year Mr. Donoven expects to increase his sales and decrease his expense for advertising to 2 per cent of his sales.

"I write my own advertising copy," said Mr. Donoven to the Twin City Commercial Bulletin. "What I cannot think of myself I steal from good advertisements in city newspapers. City advertisers do the same thing, so I guess it's all right."

This merchant is one who is not troubled by catalog house competition.

"A man came to me a few days ago and wanted me to join in a movement by merchants to combat the competition of mail order houses. I told him to count me out, that the catalog houses did not bother me and I could not see why I should bother them."

"The way I feel about the catalog house proposition is just like this," continued Mr. Donoven, "there are a lot of people in Fergus Falls who go to the Twin Cities to do their trading; there are quite a number, probably who buy from the catalog houses, too. Combined, their trade would probably make an item, but competition has got to come from somewhere and I would just as soon it came from Chicago as Fergus Falls. If some people did not buy in Chicago and the Twin Cities it would mean more stores and more competition in Fergus Falls.

Base Ball Meeting.

The base ball fans will have an opportunity to enthuse Friday evening when a meeting will be held at the city hall to talk over the prospects for a local team next season. All people interested as well as would-be base ball players are invited to attend the meeting. There is a possibility that some excellent base ball material may be secured for next season and it is up to the fans to determine at this time whether or not a team can be financed.

Doctor Got His.

Dr. J. O. Kjelland of Crookston, after a trial at Grand Rapids on the charge of buying deer meat in violation of the law, was found guilty and sentenced to pay a fine of $100 and costs.

FOR LONGER TERMS

Judges of Probate Suggest Six Year Term.

The judges of probate of the state of Minnesota, in session at Duluth recently, expressed themselves, in resolutions adopted, as favoring a six year term of office for judges of probate. The resolution recites that the public will get better service if judges hold for longer terms. They believe that in the very important work of settling up estates a longer term of office will insure better service with less liability of mistakes being made.

AN AUTOMOBILE CLUB

One With Fifteen Members Organized in Red Lake Falls.

The Red Lake Falls Automobile Club is a new organization that starts out with fifteen members. Samuel Gibeau was chosen president of the new organization; Jos. Helm, sr., vice president; Jos. Helm, jr., secretary and treasurer. The directors are Chas. E. Boughton, Dr. J. C. Wilkinson, Joseph Helm, sr., Jos. Helm, jr., V. M. Higinbotham, Samuel Gibeau. P. B. Gaass was chosen delegate to the state association meeting and he was in Minneapolis last week in attendance at the annual meeting.

All of the automobile owners in the city are members of the club and it is expected that a number of people who have been showing symptoms, will become afflicted with bubbleitis and that the new club will prosper.

Haugen-Haller.

The following account published in the Fargo Forum of the marriage of Miss Alma C. Haller, formerly a teacher in the Red Lake Falls schools, will be of interest to Miss Haller's friends here:

"A very pleasant wedding took place at the home of Judge and Mrs. Axel Haller on Kingman hill, Red Wing, 5 o'clock Wednesday evening, when their daughter, Miss Alma C. Haller, was married to Gustaf O. Haugen, of White Earth, N. D. Rev. O. S. Meland performed the ceremony in the presence of a few immediate relatives and friends. Mr. and Mrs. Haugen left for the twin cities. They will reside at White Earth, N. D., where the groom is engaged in the banking business. The bride has a wide circle of friends in Red Wing, where she has always lived, who esteem her highly and their best wishes go with her to her new home."

"Goldship" Sinks.

In the last issue of the Hendrum Review is published a letter from John W. Arctender, of "Goldship" fame, who came through here a year or so ago and sold shares in that venture. Mr. Arctander announces the complete failure of the enterprise and says the stockholders will lose all the money they put into the undertaking. It would be interesting to have a complete statement of the money received by this concern and just what it was expended for. Quite a number in this county lost money in this venture. —Ada Index.

HAVE YOU SEEN THE NEW COMET?

People Rewarded Last Saturday Evening After Much "Looking."

New Comet is Without a Name and Even the Astronomers Are Mystified.

"Looking for the comet" has become quite a popular diversion for Red Lake Falls people and each evening at about six o'clock people may be seen watching the new comet, without a name, the appearance of which is a surprise even to the astronomers.

The new comet is visible as the twilight is approaching. Although it is faint at first it increases in brightness as the sun goes down. The comet was first observed here Thursday evening, but on Saturday evening the finest view was obtained, the sky being perfectly clear that evening. The comet may be seen in the western horizon just before sunset. Watch for it near the sun in between 5:30 and 6:30 and if the sky is clear you can't fail to see it. The most favorable hour is about six o'clock.

One reason given why the comet sprung a surprise on the astronomers is that it may be that it is not visible oftener than once in every two or three thousand years and for that reason there is no record of its previous visit.

This is not Halley's comet arrived ahead of schedule time, as some people thought. The astronomers know exactly the location of Halley's comet and have announced that it is to be visible in the spring. It can be seen even now if one wishes to figure out its location, but it is so far from the earth that it appears as a star.

An instructor in astronomy at the University offers the following "receipt" for locating the comet that can now be seen at sunset:

"You find it slightly to the southwest at sunset," he said. "There is only one very bright star in the west at evening, and that is Venus, a little to the south of west. Draw a line from Venus straight down to the horizon. Then draw another line from Venus, making an angle of 45 degrees with your first line towards the north and this second line will pass directly through the comet. Watch for the comet between the hours of 5:30 and 6:30. I saw it at 5:45 and the most favorable hour is about 6 o'clock if the sky is clear.

New Store at Plummer.

N. B. Nelson of Kennedy, Minn., spent the first of the week here making arrangments to open a general merchandise store next month. He has made arrangments with Mr. Carlson to rent his building and will put in a complete and up-to-date stock to the amount of $15,000. The deal was made so that later in the spring he can buy the building which is one of the best in town. Mr. Carlson will conduct his feed business in the rear of the building until later, when he will build on the corner he owns, just across the street west of his present location. Mr. Nelson has been running a general store at Kennedy for several years but picked Plummer as a better location so disposed of his business there.—Plummer Pioneer.

WANT TEST FARMS

MODEL TRACTS OF TEN ACRES EACH TO BE PROVIDED FOR EXPERIMENTS.

TO IMPROVE MINN. AGRICULTURE

Farmers Will Assemble To Study Crops and District Problems,—Commercial Club Delegates Would Aid State Growth.

Minneapolis.—Demonstration farm tracts, ten in number, established in as many sections of the state and operated under instructions of agricultural college experts, spreading the most advanced ideas of farming, are the novel innovation which will follow the sessions of the third annual meeting of the Minnesota Federation of Commercial Clubs.

These model farms, ten acres each in extent, are to be furnished by the various commercial clubs, acting in conjunction with the farmers. The crops are to be sown under the direction of the farm school experts, with farmers from the entire section in attendance. Meetings are to be held in towns, following the actual work in the field, at which the farmers will be privileged to ask any questions which present themselves. Similar gatherings will attend each new step as the harvest progresses, the crop, at the end of the season, to belong to the farmer owning the land.

"We don't know just what grates will be experimented with first," said Secretary Mosher. "Where we find a section backward in the production of certain crops, these will be given special attention."

A committee was appointed to look after the details of the scheme and to consult with the state farm school authorities, as follows: A. O. Nortz, Breckenridge; E. H. Heine, Renville; John Stone Pardee, Duluth, and Allan Ferbush, Osakis.

The meeting was called to order by President D. M. Neill, of Red Wing, who also responded to the address of welcome by Mayor Haynes. Frank J. Meyst, of Minneapolis, also spoke. About 100 attended.

Development of the state's waterpower, proper rotation of crops, conservation of the coal supply and the more extensive use of peat for fuel purposes, better roads, industrial training in schools, better public sanitation, the planting of trees on barren land and a closer relationship between the various classes of people of the state—all were advocated by Governor Eberhart in his address on "Conservation" in the Commercial club rooms.

Minneapolis.—Something of a stiff fight marked the closing session of the third annual convention of the Minnesota Federation of Commercial Clubs, when the report of the committee on the demonstration farms to be established by the state university was read.

It recommended that the state agricultural college establish such farms at Breckenridge, Renville, Pipestone, Osakis, Delano, Bemidji, Wadena, East Grand Forks, Detroit, Rothsay, Willmar and Stewartville.

Fergus Falls, St. Cloud, Alexandria, Watertown, Red Wing, Hibbing and Brook Park were included in an accessory list to be considered by the university. Delegates from St. Cloud and Brainerd immediately protested against cutting their cities from the list.

By the report of the nominating committee, President D. M. Neill, of Red Wing, was re-elected for his third term. Other officers were chosen as follows: F. E. Wade, of Fairmont, first vice president; Andrew Davis, of Elk River, second vice president; W. L. Brooks, of Bemidji, third vice president, and Frank J. Meyst, of Minneapolis, treasurer.

The executive committee members chosen were Dr. Burns, of Stewartville, for the first district; F. B. Nelson, of Luverne, for the second district; W. W. Sivright, of Hutchinson, for the third district; J. W. Mitchell, of St. Paul, for the fourth district; Wallace O. Nye, of Minneapolis, for the fifth district; R. R. Wise, of Brainerd, for the sixth district; F. W. Murphy, of Wheaton, for the seventh district; H. V. Eva, of Duluth, for the eighth district, and Thomas R. Browne, of Crookston, for the ninth.

The report of the resolutions committee embodied a protest against exaggerated press reports of storms in Minnesota; a recommendation that the state investment board invest the state funds in municipal and country drainage bonds, instead of bonds of other states; and a vote of thanks to the Commercial club, mayor and city of Minneapolis for their hearty welcome, and another to the Twin City press for its assistance in giving publicity.

Resolutions deploring the deaths of the late Governor Johnson, and of the late Professor Williamson Robertson, of the Crookston school of agriculture, were also adopted.

NO WATER POWER GIFT.

Not Likely That Twin Cities Will Profit by High Dam.

Washington, D. C.—Consideration that is being given to participation by private and public corporations in the activities of the United States in water power and conservation questions at this time gives rise to the belief among members of the commerce committees of the two houses that it will be impossible for Minneapolis and St. Paul and the state university ever to obtain the consent of the engineer department of the government or of congress to donate the power which would result from the proposed 30 foot dam.

It is believed here that the engineers and the river and harbor committee will favor the high dam, but the agitation that has taken place over water power rights and the desirability of saving to the United States profits accruing from such power rights makes it certain that strong objections will be raised to making any gift of power either to cities or to private parties.

Under the terms of the bill introduced Wednesday by Senator Nelson, strict provisions are made to care for water power rights and all privileges connected therewith in lands or waters owned or controlled by the United States.

The prediction is now made that the river and harbor committee will favor the high dam project with a substantial appropriation and also a sum sufficient to construct the foundations of the proposed power plant.

Lee of Long Prairie, Thomas H. Canfield of Lake Park was elected.

Furlong. W. W. Sivright of Hutchinson, president of the Minneapolis Implement Dealers' association, was elected to succeed J. M. Underwood on the board.

ENDORSE CAUCUS

REPUBLICANS IN HOUSE DECLINE TO PUT RAINEY ON COMMITTEE.

VOTE WAS 192 TO 147

Illinois Democrat, Choice of Party Caucus for Ballinger Committee, is Formally Turned Down by the House.

Washington, Jan. 20.—The democratic leaders of the house decided this morning to stand by their original caucus nominees for the Ballinger-Pinchot investigating committee. This points to a refusal by Lloyd of Missouri to serve in lieu of Rainey of Illinois.

Representative Lloyd of Missouri announced to the house that he would not serve on the Ballinger-Pinchot committee. His statement was greeted with applause.

Representative of Alabama (democrat), offered an amendment to the republican rule, naming the members of the Ballinger committee, proposing to substitute Rainey for Lloyd.

Washington, Jan. 20.—The caucus of republican members of the house last night named the house side of the Ballinger-Pinchot investigating committee and incidentally rejected Rainey of Illinois, one of the two democrats selected by the democratic caucus last Saturday night as the house minority's representative on the investigation committee.

The six men selected include three "regular" republicans, McCall of Massachusetts, Olmstead of Pennsylvania and Denby of Michigan; one "insurgent" republican, Madison of Kansas, and two democrats, James of Kentucky and Lloyd of Missouri.

Rainey of Illinois, who with James was named by the democratic caucus last Saturday night, was rejected by last night's caucus of the majority and Lloyd was named in his stead.

DAY WAS A LIVE ONE.

Tree Planting Discussed—Senator McCumber, Addresses Farmers.

Fargo, N. D., Jan. 20.—The third day of the Tri-state meeting was a very lively one. In the forenoon horticultural subjects were discussed. Pres. Worst of the Agricultural college called the meeting to order and introduced G. C. Gregg of the farmer's institute corps of North Dakota, who then addressed the assemblage. He was followed by A. Brackett, of the Minnesota farmers institute corps. Both talked on trees for this section of the country and were asked numerous questions when their addresses were completed.

The afternoon session was under the auspices of the Equity society and was addressed by Sen. P. J. McCumber, who urged upon the farmers the necessity of organization.

Said Sen. McCumber in part:

"Potentially, the agricultural class is the greatest power in the world, and actually it exercises less influence over its own destiny and welfare than any other class."

"The question is often asked me, 'Why don't this federal inspection bill pass?' The answer could be summed up in a single sentence: Because the farmers are not organized, and all the great boards of trade are organized."

The audience was estimated at two thousand people and the senator's speech was followed with the closest attention and was punctuated with applause.

TRI-STATE GRAIN MEETING

ELEVENTH ANNUAL SESSION NOW BEING HELD.

Every Train to Fargo Brings In Its Quota of Farmers and Stock Men Attendance is Large.

Fargo, Jan. 18.—For the eleventh time in the history of the northwest the great annual gathering of farmers and stockmen from North and South Dakota and Minnesota, officially known as the Tri-State Grain & Stock Growers' convention, opened this morning at 10 o'clock in the Fargo operahouse. For four full days the convention will be in session during which time most interesting and complete programme will be rendered.

All yesterday visitors arrived in the city. During the night every train brought in crowds that made the hotels very lively places. This morning every passenger train and even some of the freights, on all the railroads carried large delegations, all of whom were bound for the Grain Growers' convention, the poultry show, the beech show and the corn show.

When the doors of the operahouse were thrown open there were a large number of people waiting outside. Before the programme started the parquet was well filled, the initial attendance being the largest ever witnessed at the Grain Growers' convention. The attendance at the morning session was the first day of the meeting is usually rather light and it is therefore predicted, taking into consideration the large crowd this morning, that the greatest one in the history of the organization.

Promptly at 10 o'clock the hour set for the opening of the convention, Pres. J. H. Worst, of the agricultural college called the convention to order with a few brief remarks. He then introduced Rev. S. S. Wyand, pastor of the Broadway M. E. church of this city, who, in an excellent prayer asked the divine blessing to rest upon the convention.

In his address of welcome Judge Miller, aside from giving the farmers visiting here the freedom of the city, gave the agricultural college and its faculty a boost which is well deserved.

The responses to the address of welcome were made by Hon. J. Dexter Pierce of Larimore and E. S. DeLancy of Valley City. Mr. Pierce paid particular attention to the establishment of farmer's clubs over the state as a means of making rural life more interesting and benefiting the agriculturatists in their work.

MINERS IN CONVENTION

Annual Session of Bituminous Men in Indianapolis.

Indianapolis, Jan. 18.—The annual convention of the United Mine Workers of North America, which opened at Tomlinson hall in this city today, practically is devoted to the interest of thousands of men that labor in the immense bituminous coal fields of the country which stretch from Virginia and central Pennsylvania northwest to British Columbia and southwest to Texas and Oklahoma, engaging all the middle western states.

The bituminous miners are deeply concerned in the proposed demand for an increase of their wages that may be set at any point between 10 and 20 per cent.

The disaster at Cherry, Ill., has given a new impetus to a movement for federal regulation of the operation of mines and this matter will only be second in importance to the question of wages in the convention.

President Lewis vigorously will press his campaign for the institution of a government bureau on mines and mining.

TRAIN IN WRECK

NORTHERN PACIFIC NO. 7 LEAVES RAILS NEAR NEW SALEM—50 INJURED.

NO PEOPLE ARE KILLED

Double Header, Running Fifty Miles An Hour Derailed—Bismarck Traveling Man Only One Critically Injured.

Bismarck, N. D., Jan. 19.—The Northern Pacific clinched its distinction as the luckiest railroad in the world, when a heavily loaded westbound train, No. 7, packed to the aisle with passengers, dashed off the track and into a ditch two miles west of New Salem without killing a passenger.

W. W. Lohes of Bismarck, traveling representative of the Armour Packing Co., was perhaps the most seriously injured. He is at the Bismarck hospital in this city suffering badly from internal injuries and shock. He has been unconscious a great part of the time since the accident and is still in a critical condition this morning.

Dr. F. R. Smyth, Northern Pacific surgeon at this point, says all the other injured persons at the hospital here are doing well and promise to come through all right.

The train was a double header and was running fifty miles an hour when the engines struck a broken rail. The air brakes were immediately applied, but the coaches back of the mail car jumped the rails, skidded along two blocks on the ties, filling the air with splinters and wreckage of the track and then the coaches, eight in number plunged down into the ditch below.

The accident happened just about twilight. All of the coaches were heavily loaded, and at once there was pandemonium in the smoker and the day coach. The coaches turned over on their sides and tops and those who were not too badly injured managed to make their exit through the doors, which were warped and twisted out of shape and were pried open with some difficulty.

The passengers, who were unhurt, with train crew immediately set to work to rescue the injured, fears of fire in the coaches spurring them on to extraordinary efforts. Fortunately, all of the stoves were closed tight and there was no fire in any of the coaches.

CONVENTION WELL ATTENDED.

Operahouse Filled to Overflowing With Agriculturalists.

Fargo, N. D., Jan. 19.—Yesterday was marked as the biggest opening day, in point of attendance in the history of the tri-state convention. Today every record was broken. The town is simply swamped with agriculturalists from every part of the northwest. This morning the operahouse was packed until every inch of standing room was taken. Fourteen hundred farmers crowded into this morning's session.

Today, the second day of the annual convention of the Tri-state Grain & Stock Growers' association, was devoted entirely to the livestock side of the organization. The meeting was presided over by Prof. W. B. Richards of the agricultural college and secretary of the North Dakota Live Stock association. It proved to be one of the most interesting meetings and exhibited the greatest amount of enthusiasm of any live stock session ever held in the state.

The programme this morning began at 9:30 o'clock and from that time until the noon hour the entire time was taken up with subjects relating to dairying and the advisability of the farmers of North Dakota taking up this department of farm work. The speakers all advised the establishment of dairy herds and there was considerable discussion after each paper.

REACHES DANGER STAGE.

Great Ice Gorge Breaks and Pittsburg Is Menaced.

Pittsburg, Pa., Jan. 19.—Tons upon tons of water today poured into the Ohio from the Allegheny river, where, thirty miles above this city, the ice gorge at Freeport broke last night. The Allegheny bank, full of soft, spongy ice, crumbled into small floes by its tumble over the dam after the gorge let go, was forcing the Ohio river up at the rate of two feet an hour. The crest was expected about noon.

As soon as the gorge broke Henry Dennwitt, the local forecaster of the weather bureau sent out warnings by telephone. The police too notified residents and business men of the down town district, and as it was expected twenty-four feet, two feet above the danger mark, would be reached by noon today, there was a scurrying to move furniture and stock to the upper floors.

6,000 Men Vote to Strike.

Philadelphia, Jan. 19.—As a result of a series of disagreements between the grievance committee of the local committee of the local union and the management of the Philadelphia Rapid Transit company, 6,000 motormen and conductors, members of the Amalgamated Association of Street and Electric Railway employes, last night and early this morning voted to strike at the call of the executive board of the union.

Governors Talk Conservation.

Washington, Jan. 19.—Conservation of resources was the topic considered today by thirty state governors now in conference here. Having made most a propitious beginning yesterday, the conference today planned to accomplish more actual business than yesterday.

Governor Crothers of Maryland made the first address, speaking of good roads. He was followed by Governor Deneen of Illinois, whose topic was waterways. The last formal address of the morning session was by Governor Quinby of New Hampshire, who spoke on forests.

The German Tariff Fight.

Berlin, Jan. 19.—It was semi-officially declared today that tariff negotiations with the United States had not been broken off, and it was added that time remained for the settlement of the difference between the two countries. In the absence of such a settlement the general tariff rates will go into effect on Feb. 7.

Roof Drops and Kills Pupil.

Coffeyville, Kan., Jan. 16.—The roof of a public school building here collapsed today, killing one person, injuring three others and causing a panic among the children.

SYNOPSIS.

Baraka, a Tartar girl, became enamored of a golden bearded stranger who was prospecting and studying herbs in the vicinity of her home in central Asia, and revealed to him the location of a mine of rubies hoping that the stranger would love her in return for her disclosure. They were followed to the cave by the girl's relatives, who blocked up the entrance and drew off the water supply, leaving the couple to die. Baraka's cousin Saad, her betrothed, attempted to climb down a cliff overlooking the mine; but the traveler shot him. The stranger was revived from a water gourd Saad carried, dug his way out of the tunnel, and departed, deserting the girl and carrying a bag of rubies. Baraka gathered all the gems she could carry, and started in pursuit. Margaret Donne (Margarita da Cordova), a famous prima donna, became engaged in London to Konstantin Logotheti, a wealthy Greek financier. Her intimate friend was Countess Leven, known as Lady Maud, whose husband had been killed by a bomb in St. Petersburg, and Lady Maud's most intimate friend was Rufus Van Torp, an American who had become one of the richest men in the world. Van Torp was in love with Margaret, and rushed to London as soon as he heard of her betrothal. He offered Lady Maud $50,000 for her pet charity if she would aid him in winning the singer from Logotheti. Baraka approached Logotheti at Versailles with rubies to sell. He presented a ruby to Margaret. Van Torp bought a yacht and sent it to Venice. He was visited by Baraka in male attire. She gave him a ruby after the American had told her of having seen in the United States a man answering the description of the one she loved. The American followed Margaret to the Bayreuth "Parsifal" festival. Margaret took a liking to Van Torp, who presented her with the ruby Baraka had given him.

"Stemp," he asked, as he threw off his coat and kicked off his dusty shoes, "were you ever sea-sick?"

"Yes, sir," answered the admirable valet, but he offered no more information on the subject.

During the silence that followed, neither wasted a second. It is no joke to wash and get into evening dress in six minutes, even with the help of a body-servant trained to do his work at high speed.

"I mean," said Van Torp, when he was already fastening his collar, "are you sea-sick nowadays?"

"No, sir," replied Stemp, in precisely the same tone as before.

"I don't mean on a 20,000-ton liner. Black cravat. Yes. I mean on a yacht. Fix it behind. Right. Would you be sea-sick on a steam yacht?"

"No, sir."

"Sure?"

"Yes, sir."

"Then I'll take you. Tuxedo."

"Thank you, sir."

Stemp held up the dinner-jacket; Mr. Van Torp's solid arms slipped into the sleeves, he shook his sturdy shoulders, and pulled the jacket down in front while the valet "settled" the back. Then he faced round suddenly, like a soldier at drill.

"All right?" he inquired.

Stemp looked him over carefully from head to foot in the glare of the electric light.

"Yes, sir."

Van Torp left the room at once. He found Mrs. Rushmore slowly moving about the supper-table, more imposing than ever in a perfectly new black tea-gown and an extremely smart widow's cap. Mr. Van Torp thought she was a very fine old lady indeed. Margaret had not entered yet; a waiter with smooth yellow hair stood by a portable sideboard on which there were covered dishes. There were poppies and corn-flowers in a plain white jar on the table. Mrs. Rushmore smiled at the financier; it would hardly be an exaggeration to say that she beamed upon him. They had not met alone since his first visit on the previous afternoon.

"Miss Donne is a little late," she said, as if the fact were very pleasing. "You brought her back, of course."

"Why, certainly," said Mr. Van Torp with an amiable smile.

"You can hardly have come straight from the theater," continued the lady, "for I heard the other people in the hotel coming in fully 20 minutes before you did."

"We walked home very slowly," said Mr. Van Torp, still smiling amiably.

"Ah, I see! You went for a little walk to get some air!" She seemed delighted.

"We walked home very slowly in order to breathe the air," said Mr. Van Torp—"to breathe the air, as you say. I have to thank you very much for giving me your seat, Mrs. Rushmore."

"To tell the truth," replied the good lady, "I was very glad to let you take my place. I cannot say I enjoy that sort of music myself. It gives me a headache."

Margaret entered at this point in a marvelous "creation" of Chinese crape, of the most delicate shade of heliotrope. Her dressmaker called it a tea-gown, but Mr. Van Torp would have thought it "quite appropriate" for a "dinner-dance" at Bar Harbor.

"My dear child," said Mrs. Rushmore, "how long you were in getting back from the theater! I began to fear that something had happened!"

"We walked home very slowly," said Margaret, with a pleasant smile.

"Ah? You went for a little walk to get some air?"

"We just walked home very slowly, in order to breathe the air," Margaret answered innocently.

It dawned on Mr. Van Torp that the dignified Mrs. Rushmore was not quite devoid of a sense of humor. It also occurred to him that her repetition of the question to Margaret, and the latter's answer, must have revealed to her the fact that the two had agreed upon what they would say, since they used identically the same words, and that they therefore had an understanding about something they preferred to conceal from her. Nothing could have given Mrs. Rushmore such profound satisfaction as this, and it revealed itself in her bright smiles and her anxiety that both Margaret and Van Torp should, if possible, over-eat themselves with the excellent things she had been at pains to provide for them and for herself. For she was something of an epicure and her dinners in Versailles were of good fame, even in Paris.

Great appetites are generally silent, like the sincerest affections. Margaret was very hungry, and Mr. Van Torp was both hungry and very much in love. Mrs. Rushmore was neither, and she talked pleasantly while tasting each delicacy with critical satisfaction.

"By the by," she said at last, when she saw that the millionaire was backing his foretopsail to come to anchor, as Capt. Brown might have expressed it, "I hope you have not had any trouble about your rooms, Mr. Van Torp."

"None at all, that I know of," answered the latter. "My man told me nothing."

"The Russian prince arrived this evening while you were at the theater, and threatened the director with all sorts of legal consequences because the rooms he had ordered were occupied. He turns out to be only a count after all."

"You don't say so," observed Mr. Van Torp, in an encouraging tone.

"What became of him?" Margaret asked, without much interest.

"Did Potts not tell you, my dear? Why, Justine assisted at the whole interview and came and told me at once."

Justine was Mrs. Rushmore's Parisian maid, who always knew everything.

"What happened?" inquired Margaret, still not much interested.

"He arrived in an automobile," answered Mrs. Rushmore, and she paused.

"What old Grigge calls a sudden-death-cart," Mr. Van Torp put in.

"What a shocking name for it!" cried Mrs. Rushmore. "And you are always in them, my dear child!" She looked at Margaret. "A sudden-death-cart! It quite makes me shiver."

"Grigge says that all his friends either kill or get killed in them," explained the American.

"My throat-doctor says motoring is very bad for the voice, so I've given it up," Margaret said.

"Really? Thank goodness your profession has been of some use to you at last, my dear!"

Margaret laughed.

"Tell us about the Russian count," she said. "Has he found lodgings, or is he going to sleep in his motor?"

"My dear, he's the most original man you ever heard of! First, he wanted to buy the hotel and turn us all out, and offered any price for it, but the director said it was owned by a company in Munich. Then he sent his secretary about trying to buy a house, while he dined, but that didn't succeed either. He must be very wealthy or else quite mad."

"Mad, I should say," observed Mr. Van Torp, slowly peeling a peach. "Did you happen to catch his name, Mrs. Rushmore?"

"Oh, yes! We heard nothing else all the afternoon. His name is Kralinsky—Count Kralinsky."

Mr. Van Torp continued to peel his peach scientifically and economically, though he was aware that Margaret was looking at him with sudden curiosity.

"Kralinsky," he said slowly, keeping his eyes on the silver blade of the knife as he finished what he was doing. "It's not an uncommon name, I believe. I've heard it before. Sounds Polish, doesn't it?"

He looked up suddenly and showed Margaret the peeled peach on his fork. He smiled as he met her eyes, and she nodded so slightly that Mrs. Rushmore did not notice the movement.

"Did you ever see that done better?" he asked with an air of triumph.

"Ripping!" Margaret answered. "You're a dandy dab at it!"

"My dear child, what terrible slang!"

"I'm sorry," said Margaret. "I'm catching all sorts of American expressions from Mr. Van Torp, and when they get mixed up with my English ones the result is Babel, I suppose!"

"I've not heard Mr. Van Torp use any slang expressions yet, my dear," said Mrs. Rushmore, almost severely.

"You will," Margaret retorted with a laugh. "What became of Count Kralinsky? I didn't mean to spoil your story."

"My dear, he's got the pastor to give up his house, by offering him a hundred pounds for the poor here."

Van Torp left them soon after supper, and gave himself up to Stemp, pondering over what he had accomplished in two days, and also about another question which had lately presented itself. When he was ready to send his valet to bed he sat down at his table and wrote a telegram:

"If you can find Baraka, please explain that I was mistaken. Kralinsky is not in New York, but here in Bayreuth for some days, lodging at the pastor's house."

This message was addressed to Logotheti at his lodgings in London, and Van Torp signed it and gave it to Stemp to be sent at once. Logotheti never went to bed before two o'clock, as he knew, and might very possibly get the telegram the same night.

When his man was gone, Van Torp drew his chair to the open window and sat up a long time thinking about what he had just done; for though he held that all was fair in such a contest, he did not mean to do anything which he himself thought "low down." One proof of this odd sort of integrity was that the telegram itself was a fair warning of his presence in Bayreuth, where Logotheti knew that Margaret was still stopping.

As for the rest, he was quite convinced that it was Kralinsky himself, the ruby merchant, who had suddenly appeared at Bayreuth, and that this man was no other than the youth he had met long ago as a cow-boy in the west, who used to whistle "Parsifal" with his companion in exile, and who, having grown rich, had lost no time in coming to Europe for the very purpose of hearing the music he had always loved so well. And that this man had robbed the poor Tartar girl, Mr. Van Torp had no manner of doubt; and he believed that he had probably promised her marriage and abandoned her; and if this were true, to help her to find Kralinsky was in itself a good action.

CHAPTER VII.

When Van Torp and Logotheti left Mr. Pinney's shop, the old jeweler meant to have a good look at the ruby the Greek had brought him, and was going to weigh it, not merely as a matter of business, for he weighed every stone that passed through his hands from crown diamonds to sparks, but with genuine curiosity, because in a long experience he had not seen very many rubies of such a size, which were also of such fine quality, and he wondered where this one had been found.

Just then, however, two well-dressed young men entered the shop and came up to him. He had never seen either of them before, but their looks inspired him with confidence; and when they spoke, their tone was that of English gentlemen, which all other Englishmen find it practically impossible to imitate, and which had been extremely familiar to Mr. Pinney from his youth. Though he was the great jeweler himself, the wealthy descendant of five of his name in succession, and much better off than half his customers, he was alone in his shop that morning. The truth was that his only son, the sixth Pinney and the apple of his eye, had just been married and was gone abroad for a honeymoon trip, and the head shopman, who was Scotch, was having his month's holiday at Ayrshire, and the second man had been sent for, to clean and restring the duchess of Barchester's pearls at her grace's house in Cadogan Gardens, as was always done after the season, and a couple of skilled workmen for whom Mr. Pinney found occupation all the year round were in the workshop at their tables; wherefore, out of four responsible and worthy men who usually were about, only the great Mr. Pinney himself was at his post.

One of the two well-dressed customers asked to see some pins, and the other gave his advice. The first bought a pin with a small sapphire set in sparks, for ten guineas, and gave only two pearls for it because he paid cash. Mr. Pinney put the pin into its little morocco case, wrapped it up neatly and handed it to the purchaser. The latter and his friend said good-morning in a civil and leisurely manner, sauntered out, took a hansom a few steps farther down the street, and drove away.

The little paper twist containing Logotheti's ruby was still exactly where Mr. Pinney had placed it on the counter, and he was going to examine the stone and weigh it at last, when two more customers entered the shop, evidently foreigners, and moreover of a sort unfamiliar to the good jeweler, and especially suspicious.

The two were Baraka and her interpreter and servant, whom Logotheti had called a Turk, and who was really a Turkish subject and a Mohammedan, though as to race, he was a half-bred Greek and Dalmatian. New Dalmatians are generally honest, truthful, and trustworthy, and the low-class Greek of Constantinople is usually extremely sharp, if he is nothing more definitely reprehensible; and Baraka's man was a cross between the two, as I have said, and had been brought up as a Musulman in a rich Turkish family, and recommended to Baraka by the Persian merchant in whose house she had lived. He had been originally baptized a Christian under the name of Spiro, and had been subsequently renamed Salim when he was made a real Moslem at 12 years old, so he used whichever name suited the circumstances in which he was placed. At present he was Spiro.

The interpreter spoke broken but intelligible English. He called Baraka his master and explained that the latter wished to see some rubies, if Mr. Pinney had any, cut or uncut. The young gentleman, he said, did not speak English, but was a good judge of stones.

For one moment the jeweler forgot the little paper twist as he turned towards his safe, pulling out his keys at the same time. To reach the safe he had to walk the whole length of the shop, behind the counter, and before he had gone half way he remembered the stone, turned, came back and slipped it into his waistcoat pocket. Then he went and got the little japanned strong-box with a patent lock, in which he kept loose stones, some wrapped up in little pieces of paper, and some in pill boxes. He brought it to his customers, and opened it before them.

They stayed a long time, and Spiro asked many questions for Baraka, chiefly relating to the sliding scale of prices which is regulated by the weight of the stones where their quality is equally good, and Baraka made notes of some sort in a little English memorandum book, as if she had done it all her life; but Mr. Pinney could not see what she wrote. He was careful, and watched the stones when she took them in her fingers and held them up against the light, or laid them on a sheet of white paper to look at them critically.

"Merciful Providence!" Cried Mr. Pinney.

She bought nothing, and when she had seen all he had to show her, she thanked him very much through Spiro, said she would come back another day, and went out with a leisurely, oriental gait, as if nothing in the world could hurry her. Mr. Pinney counted the stones again, and was going to lock the box, when his second man came in, having finished stringing the duchess' pearls. At the same moment, it occurred to Mr. Pinney that he might as well go to luncheon, and that he had better put Logotheti's ruby into the little strong-box and lock it up in the safe until he at last had a chance to weigh it. He accordingly took the screw of paper from his waistcoat pocket, and as a matter of formality he undid it once more.

"Merciful Providence!" cried Mr. Pinney, for he was a religious man.

The screw of paper contained a bit of broken green glass. He threw his keys to his shopman without another word, and rushed out into the street without his hat, his keen old face deadly pale, and his beautiful frock-coat flying in his wake.

He almost hurled himself upon a quiet policeman.

"Thief!" he cried. "Two foreigners in gray clothes—ruby worth ten thousand pounds just gone—I'm Pinney the jeweler!"

You cannot astonish a London policeman. The one Pinney had caught looked quietly up and down the street, and then glanced at his interlocutor to be sure that it was he, for he knew him by sight.

"All right," he said quickly, but very quietly. "I'll have them in a minute, sir, for they're in sight still. Better go in while I take them, sir."

He caught them in less than a minute without the slightest difficulty, and by some odd coincidence two other policemen suddenly appeared quite close to him. There was a little stir in the street, but Baraka and Spiro were too sensible and too sure of themselves to offer any useless resistance, and supposing there was some misunderstanding they walked back quietly to Mr. Pinney's shop between two of the policemen, while the third went for a four-wheeler at the nearest stand, which happened to be the corner of Brook street and New Bond street.

Mr. Pinney recognized his late customers without hesitation, and went with them to the police station, where he told his story and showed the piece of green glass. Spiro tried to speak, but was ordered to hold his tongue, and as no rubies were found in their pockets he and Baraka were led away to be more thoroughly searched.

But now, at last, Baraka resisted, and with such tremendous energy that there would have been serious trouble if Spiro had not called out something which at once changed the aspect of matters.

"Master is lady!" he yelled. "Lady, man clothes!"

"That makes a pretty bad case," observed the sergeant, who was superintending. "Send for Mrs. Mowle."

Baraka did not resist when she saw the matron, and went quietly with her to a cell at the back of the station. In less than ten minutes Mrs. Mowle came out and locked the door after her. She was a cheery little person, very neatly dressed, and she had restless bright eyes like a ferret. She brought a little bag of soft deerskin in her hand, and a steel bodkin with a wrought silver handle, such as southern Italian women used to wear in their hair before such weapons were prohibited. Mrs. Mowle gave both objects to the officer without comment.

"Any scars or tattoo-marks, Mrs. Mowle?" he inquired in his business-like way.

"Not a one," answered Mrs. Mowle, who had formerly taken in washing at home and was the widow of a brave policeman, killed in doing his duty.

In the bag there were several screws of paper, which were found to contain uncut rubies of different sizes to a large value. But there was one, much larger than the others, which Mr. Van Torp had not seen that morning. Mr. Pinney looked at it very carefully, held it to the light, laid it on a sheet of paper, and examined it long in every aspect. He was a conscientious man.

"To the best of my belief," he deposed, "this is the stone that was on my counter half an hour ago, and for which this piece of green glass was substituted. It is the property of a customer of mine, Mons. Konstantin Logotheti of Paris, who brought it to me this morning to be cut. I think it may be worth between nine and ten thousand pounds. I can say nothing as to the identity of the paper, for tissue paper is very much alike everywhere."

"The woman," observed the officer in charge of the station, "appears to steal nothing but rubies. It looks like a queer case. We'll lock up the two, Mr. Pinney, and if you will be kind enough to look in to-morrow morning, I'm sure the magistrate won't keep you waiting for the case."

Vastly relieved and comforted, Mr. Pinney returned to his shop. Formality required that the ruby itself, with the others in the bag, should remain in the keeping of the police till the magistrate ordered it to be returned to its rightful owner, the next morning; but Mr. Pinney felt quite as sure of its safety as if it were in the japanned strong-box in his own safe, and possibly even a little more sure, for nobody could steal it from the police station.

"In everything you do, aim to excel;
For what is worth doing, is worth doing well."

Some Sunday Night Supper Dishes.

After a heavy, late dinner on Sunday, one does not care for anything but a light supper as a rule. Milk toast makes a nice supper dish, with tea, cake and preserves a sufficiently satisfying meal may be made.

For those who like a more substantial supper the rarebits are still favorites. The tomato rarebit is a little out of the ordinary, and very nice.

Put two tablespoonfuls of butter in a saucepan. When melted add two tablespoonfuls of flour. Pour on gradually, three-fourths of a cup of thin cream, and as soon as the mixture is thickened add three-fourths of a cup of tomatoes, strained and mixed with one-eighth of a teaspoon of soda. Add two eggs, slightly beaten, two cupfuls of finely cut cheese, salt, mustard and cayenne to taste. Serve on graham toast.

A tomato cream soup is always a good dish to serve for supper. An oyster stew goes without saying, for almost any occasion.

Sandwiches of many kinds, appropriate, may be served with a cream soup.

Winter Desserts.

In winter it is easier to digest heavier foods and the complex desserts find favor. Rich puddings with sauces are never easy of digestion, but in winter they are the least harmful, as we need more hearty foods to supply heat to the body. As eggs are always an item to be reckoned with during the cold months recipes which call for few or none are in demand. A very nice pudding that has not even one egg is the Oyster Rarebit.

Clean, parboil and drain one cupful of oysters, reserving the liquor. Melt two tablespoonfuls of butter, add half a pound of soft, mild cheese, cut in small pieces, one-fourth of a teaspoonful of salt, a few grains of cayenne and two eggs, slightly beaten. As soon as the mixture is smooth, add the oysters with the tough muscle discarded.

"STUDY simplicity in the number of the dishes and variety in the character of the meals."

"When anything goes wrong and you can't help it—sing."

Popovers.

Measure one cupful of flour; add a half teaspoonful of salt and one cup of milk, gradually. Add an egg yolk well beaten. Beat two minutes, then cut and fold in the stiffly beaten white of the egg. Turn into hissing, hot, greased gem irons. Bake 30 minutes in a hot oven.

The Gift Hamper.

The small grape baskets may be tastefully lined and trimmed with timely greens, then filled with anything that the friend in mind may especially like. One dainty box or basket might contain a few small tumblers of choice jelly properly labeled. The girl who is away from home will appreciate more than anything else the home cooking. Dainty cakes, cookies, small mince pies, a little home made candy, some nuts and fruit; not forgetting the little greeting that bears the giver's thought.

For the invalid, the gift hamper is especially delightful. It should be made as dainty and attractive as possible that it may be a delight to the eye.

These little hampers may be given by the friend who cannot afford much of money value, but will be appreciated perhaps more than a costly gift.

Here are some cakes that will be very nice to put in the gift hamper:

Chess Cakes.

Put four ounces of melted butter in a mixing bowl, add the grated rind of two oranges, four ounces of powdered sugar, half a cup of currants, the yolk of an egg well beaten, two tablespoonfuls of grated cocoanut and half a dozen crumbed macaroons. Mix the ingredients until thoroughly blended and pour into small patty pans that have been lined with puff paste. Bake 15 minutes in a quick oven.

Jack Horner Plum Cakes.

Take a cupful of molasses, a cupful of strong strained coffee, half a teaspoon each of allspice, cloves, mace, ginger, nutmeg and cinnamon, a cupful of lard or beef drippings and a cup of brown sugar. Mix these ingredients to a thick cream and when very light stir in a cupful of sour milk in which is dissolved a teaspoonful of soda, and add flour enough to form a cake batter. Lastly, add half a cup of chopped almonds, a handful of seedless raisins, two tablespoonfuls each of citron and currants. Bake in cup cake pans and when cold ice, decorating the top of each with a small cherry and strips of citron, to simulate holly.

Oculist to Treat Dog.

A bulldog belonging to Mr. H. T. Creighton of New York is to be taken to Paris to undergo an operation by an eminent oculist. Mr. Creighton and his wife will travel with the dog, and elaborate precautions will be taken for its comfort during the voyage.

Truly the Age of Steel.

For every man, woman and child in this country there is a manufactured each week more than twelve pounds of finished iron and steel products.

The Tendency to be Queer

Every Community Has Individuals Whose One Idea Is to Kick Over the Traces.

While the majority of people are inclined to think and act like one another, thus keeping the social order from violent convulsions, there is on the part of a great many a native tendency toward the queer; they are contented only outside of the traces. In every community small enough to be aware of its own individualities people in general know who are the "natural-born" come-outers—which man and which woman is likely to take up with the newest fad in dress, doctoring, means of grace, political economy, "social science" and the true authorship of Shakespeare's plays.

There are certain persons destined to progress from one so-called reform to another more extreme as quickly as the reform shows itself. They are pretty sure to box the compass of religions, passing by gradual or violent stages from absolute irreligion to the narrowest dogmatism, or with great rapidity the other way around. Or they gravitate once and for all into the most irrational and absurd "religion" which happens to be forced upon their attention, and stick contentedly to its extremest tenets and practices. The more "occult" and, to the ordinary mind, preposterous the new religion, the greater the attraction it has for certain minds. The new religion is apt to be founded on some one phase of the old—a phase of it which by very reiteration and use has become trite. In its new and fantastic dress the old principle strikes the new adept as something in the nature of a fresh revelation—Century.

States That Formally Seceded.

Eleven of the southern states passed ordinances of secession. South Carolina seceded December 24, 1860, followed by Mississippi, January 9, 1861; Florida, January 10; Alabama, January 11; Georgia, January 19; Louisiana, January 26; Texas, February 1. These seven states which comprised what was known as the "Cotton Belt," organized the confederate government. The provisional constitution was prepared February 4, 1861, and the president and vice-president were inaugurated at Montgomery, Ala., February 18. Virginia passed articles of secession and joined the insurgent government April 17, 1861; Arkansas, May 6; North Carolina, May 21; Tennessee, June 8. Though the states of Delaware, Maryland, Kentucky and Missouri did not pass ordinances of secession, they were afterward represented in the confederate congress.

It will not matter so much on what party platform the candidate may seek preferment as it will that he declare himself in no uncertain terms of his individual attitude on problems that are interesting people and will continue to interest them until they are settled and settled right.

What do you think of this, coming from the republican Blue Earth Post:

"Gifford Pinchot, national forester, after a stormy year's labor against the trusts and combines organized to gobble all the valuable water franchises in the west country, has been forced to resign by President Taft. The fellows out for the millions of graft have won a notable victory and that victory contributes much to the lessening of the popularity of President Taft among the common people. Up to date President Taft has displayed nothing of the robust broadness of the man who made him President."

A large touring car containing a man and his wife met a hay wagon fully loaded in a narrow road. The woman declared that the farmer must back out, but her husband contended that she was unreasonable. "But you can't back the automobile so far," she said, "and I don't intend to move for anybody. He should have seen us." The husband pointed out that this was impossible, owing to an abrupt turn in the road. "I don't care," she insisted. "I won't move if we stay here all night." The man in the automobile was starting to argue the matter, when the farmer, who had been sitting quietly on the hay, interrupted. "Never mind, old man," he exclaimed. "I'll try to back out. I've got one just like her at home."

There is a lively fight on for the state auditor's job and during the past week the candidates have been particularly busy circulating among the delegates to the State Agricultural Society, most of whom, strange as it may appear, besides being influential men in their several districts, are active politicians. The candidates are A. W. Thompson of Preston, R. J. Wells of Breckenridge and Auditor Iverson himself. The two gentlemen first named appear to be greatly shocked that he should be a candidate at all, claiming that as, at the close of his present term, he will have been in state office for twenty-four consecutive years, he should now be willing to voluntarily step aside and give some other patriot a chance. There may be something in this argument, although it is said Mr. Iverson does not see the force of it.

According to the Duluth News-Tribune, the leading Republican paper in the state, the party needs a Moses—one who can take the warring elements by the nape of the neck and shake a little sense into them—or out of them, whichever way you want to put it. But let the News-Tribune tell its own story:

"If ever a party needed some one strong enough and rough enough to scissor its whiskers and and pry it from its bed of moss, it is the Republican party of Minnesota. It is today but a somnolent annex to cupidity, to be sold, bartered and traded to a militant, vigorous, well-generaled Democracy. Its candidates speak in platitudes and generalizations. It is systematically kept divided and bewildered by half a dozen purely selfish, dishonest and demagogic issues. One genuine, sincere, thoroughly honest and timely idea would drive it to panic. It fears its own shadow of the past and its only hope lies in unanimous nominations, the unanimous adoption of a dishonest platform and a campaign of apology.

THE POOR MAN'S BURDEN.

If every hundred dollars of property in the United States were made to pay about one dollar and seventy cents a year in taxes the revenue so derived would meet all expenses of government, federal state and local. There would be no need of customs duties or of internal revenue taxes to support the Federal Government or of the great sums which states and cities raise by license fee, franchise taxes and the like. This statement is based upon the latest figures of government disbursements supplied by the Statistical Bureau of the Treasury, says a recent issue of the Saturday Evening Post.

According to the same authority, each hundred dollars of property that is directly taxed at all pays two dollars and five cents a year and that doesn't half meet the bills. It produces only seven hundred and seventy-five millions, while the governments—federal, state and local—spend 1709 millions. The farmer or small householder pays his two dollars and five cents on each hundred and then has to chip in his share of the additional billion—made up of customs duties, income taxes, etc.,—which the government spends.

Total cost of running the governments amounts to about twenty dollars a head a year, or a hundred dollars for a family of five. A totally thriftless person may escape his share and an exceptionally thrifty person may escape his. But we surmise that a great body of reasonably thrifty heads of families pay more than their share.

EXCHANGE ECHOES.

St. Peter Herald: Representative Steenerson exhibited fool-hardy courage when he declined to vote with the insurgents against Cannon. Ole Sageng is to finish his fall plowing in July this year, and this means that there will be at least one new face in the Minnesota congressional delegation.

Princeton Union: At the present time probably John Lind has no desire to again become governor, but at the same time it is the opinion of every thoughtful democrat one meets that when the democratic state convention convenes next August his will be the only name mentioned in connection with the governorship. Without requesting or receiving his consent the convention will nominate him and adjourn and he will make the race. No matter who his opponent may be, at best, the result will be doubtful until the votes are counted.

Red Wing Free Press: President Taft's idea is to charge the people more for postage on their newspapers in order to accumulate money with which to subsidize ship owners. The people can see the point all right.

Browne Valley Tribune: We very much fear that if the political combine with Ed. Smith and Dar Reese as the dictators has its way, the next Republican platform in Minnesota will be one of issue dodging. The rank and file of the party must wake up and get into the game if they want a platform in keeping with their views.

Fairmont Sentinel: The attempt to make the State Agricultural Society a mighty political machine went glimmering with the election of Mr. Underwood as president.

Fairmont Sentinel: Teddy Roosevelt's letter of sympathy to Mrs. Johnson, written from the jungles of Africa, shows the ex-president to have been one of our lamented Governor's most ardent admirers.

"OH! TUSH!" SAYS GOVERNOR EBERHART

Taken Care Of.

Mr. Dinehart has appointed Gilbert Gutterson of the Second district chief clerk in the State Treasurer's office. Mr. Gutterson deserves well at the hands of the people of the state and especially of the Second district, for it was largely through his instrumentality that Mr. McCleary has been permanently retired and that the district is so well and so faithfully represented in Congress. To accomplish this Mr. Gutterson has sacrificed much and is entitled to the reward he has received at Mr. Dinehart's hands. It was a political way, too, of indicating to Mr McCleary's friends and to the constituency to which Mr. Dinehart is shortly to make an appeal, just where he stands in the controversy which has raged for years around Mr. McCleary's head.

An Interesting Controversy.

Joel P. Heatwole of the Northfield New, has taken a fall out of Governor Eberhart and goaded him to the indiscretion of a reply. He charges:

"1. That Eberhart is not a Republican.

"2. That he is a tool of the Steel Trust.

"3. That he packed the senate temperance committee with representatives of the brewers combine.

"4. That he is tied up to railroad politicians.

"5. That he belongs to the senatorial combine, 'an aggregation of politicians noted for their disregard of the wishes of the people.' "

In addition to this somewhat categorical indictment Bro. Heatwole says of Governor Eberhart:

"He has not been candid with the people, but has persistently evaded a statement of his position on the real questions at issue before them.

"He has threatened to make use of the machinery of the state on behalf of the corporations to defeat the federal tax imposed upon them.

"He has advocated taking millions from the state treasury and taxing the people in the name of capitol approaches to build boulevards for the city of St. Paul.

"He represents nothing but selfish interests. His talks on conservation are but an echo of the utterances of James J. Hill.

"His smug speeches on other subjects and his pretended interest in the public's welfare are merely the specious professions of the poseur who seeks to win a reputation for disinterestedness and advanced statesmanship in order to betray the interests of a confiding public to the privileged classes, for whose support he is willing to barter the people's rights."

The Governor's Reply.

On reading an abstract of the article in Washington the governor submitted to an interview in which he said:

"It is unnecessary to go into Mr. Heatwole's charges in detail. I will pass over the statement that I should not be classed as a Republican. The people of the state know that I loyally supported both Bob Dunn and Cole and also Jacobson in their campaigns, appearing on the stump in their behalf for periods ranging from four to seven weeks. On these trips I paid my own expenses.

"Further, I constantly supported all temperance legislation while a member of the senate.

"In leading the conservation movement in Minnesota I have been actuated by no other motive than to conserve and protect the best interests of the state."

"How about Mr. Heatwole's charges that you are a tool of the steel trust?" the governor was asked.

"Oh! Tush," he replied.

The End Not Yet.

It is to be noted that the governor's reply fails to cover some important points and that as a response to a specific charge that the governor is a tool of the steel trust, supported by some asservations, the reply "Oh Tush" is not convincing. The governor's answer to the charge that he was unfriendly to temperance reform is interesting. "I constantly supported all temperance legislation while a member of the senate," he says. Mr. Heatwole's charge definitely refers not to the time the governor was a member of the senate, but to the time he was lieutenant governor. The controversy is certainly interesting and in justice to the governor should be kept up either until Mr. Heatwole's charges are fully disproved or substantiated. Possibly Mr. Dunn or Mr. Jacobson could throw light on the subject.

Dunn Speaks.

Indeed as to Dunn he has already spoken. His utterance is somewhat abscure. As I have failed, after diligent study, to fully extract its meaning I submit it to my readers:

"Governor Eberhart says he campaigned for Dunn, Cole and Jacobson at his own expense. Poor Cole is dead, Jacobson can speak for himself, and as for Dunn—he devoutly wishes the governor had "conserved" his energies in 1904 for some future occasion."

S.S.S. CURES SKIN DISEASES

The skin is composed of two distinct layers. One is known as the epidermis, or outer skin, which has no fibres, and serves principally as a covering to the body, and a protection from outward dangers to the delicate flesh beneath. The other layer is known as the derma, or true skin, and is composed of elastic fibres, fat tissue, glands, lymphatics, nerves, etc. The thousands of tiny veins and arteries with which it is interlaced constantly supply every fibre and tissue with healthful properties from the circulation to keep the skin smooth and perfect.

This is changed, however, when the blood becomes infected with humors, acids or impurities. Instead of constantly supplying rich, nutritive properties to the skin, the circulation deposits the acrid impurity with which it is contaminated, into the sensitive fibres and tissues. This causes irritation and inflammation, which splits or breaks the thin outer cuticle, while the tissues beneath ulcerate and discharge upon the surface in the form of Eczema, Salt Rheum, Tetter, etc. There is likewise a dry form of skin diseases, such as Acne, Psoriasis, etc. In these varieties the humor in the blood diseases and inflames the glands, hair follicles, etc., causing them to swell and protrude to the outer surface. Pimples, rashes, eruptions and like troubles, are all dependent on imperfect blood, and no one can have a good complexion, free from humiliating blemishes, unless the skin is kept healthy by good blood.

S.S.S. cures Skin Diseases of every kind by neutralizing the acids and removing the humors from the blood. It cools the acid-heated circulation, builds it up to normal strength, multiplies its rich, nutritious corpuscles, and adds to its purity in every way. Then the skin, instead of being irritated, inflamed and diseased by acrid impurities or fiery humors, is nourished, soothed and softened by a cooling, healthy stream of blood. S. S. S. is the greatest of all blood purifiers, and therein lies its ability to cure skin diseases. Book on Skin Diseases and medical advice free.

S.S.S. CURED HER.

Some time ago I was troubled with a severe skin affection called Acne. Small pimples would appear on my face and neck which would in time fester and become inflamed. My complexion was muddy and sallow and most unsightly. I chanced to read about S.S.S., and concluded to give it a trial; the result was entirely satisfactory, my complexion soon becoming clear, the pimples disappearing, and my skin become soft and smooth. I cannot too highly recommend S. S. S. to any who are likewise afflicted.

SOFT, WHITE HANDS

May be Obtained in One Night.

For preserving the hands as well as for preventing redness, roughness, and chapping, and imparting that velvety softness and whiteness much desired by women Cuticura Soap, assisted by Cuticura Ointment, is believed to be superior to all other skin soaps. For those who work in corrosive liquids, or at occupations which tend to injure the hands, it is invaluable. Treatment.—Bathe and soak the hands on retiring in a strong, hot, creamy lather of Cuticura Soap. Dry and anoint freely with Cuticura Ointment, and in severe cases spread the Cuticura Ointment on thin pieces of old linen or cotton. Wear during the night old, loose gloves, or a light bandage of old cotton or linen to protect the clothing from stain. For red, rough, and chapped hands, dry, fissured, itching, feverish palms, and shapeless nails with painful finger ends, this treatment is most effective. Cuticura Remedies are sold throughout the world. Potter Drug & Chem. Corp., sole proprietors, Boston, Mass.

Sold Again.

Little Willie was fond of springing surprises on his parents by announcing some terrific happening, and then, when excitement was at fever point, declaring that nothing of the kind had occurred. But he played the trick once too often. A new and very pretty governess came to stay at the house for Willie's benefit a few weeks back, and a day or two after her arrival Willie rushed to his mother saying:

"Mamma, there's a strange man upstairs who has just put his arm around Miss Wilson's waist and kissed her several times—"

"What?" said the mother, as she jumped up to pull the bell for the butler.

"Sold again, mamma!" said Willie, in great glee. "It wasn't a strange man at all. It was papa!"

A Good Head for Business.

"I want a hat pin," said little Mary of four years, as she gazed eagerly at the cushion full of sparkling ornaments on the milliner's showcase. "How much is it?" she asked, after making a very deliberate choice and laying her purchase money, a bright penny, on the counter. "Oh, nothing," returned the kind-hearted Mrs. Briggs, as Mary's mother was one of her regular customers. Imagine her amusement as the little "bargain hunter" said most eagerly: "I'll take two, then."—Delineator.

"My dear," announced Mr. Ad. Herewad, "I propose to donate you $45, to be applied to the purchase of one of those new, topsy-turvy, wicker-basket hats."

"On condition you raise an equal amount out of the ten cents a week pin money regularly allowed you," finished Mr. Herewad, magnanimously.—Judge.

"Do not anger me!" she said, sternly.

"How am I to know when you are angry?" he asked.

"I always stamp my feet," she answered.

"Impossible," he said. "There isn't room for a stamp on either of them!"

That fetched her.—Lippincott's.

WHEN DINNER COMES

One Ought to Have a Good Appetite.

A good appetite is the best sauce. It goes a long way toward helping in the digestive process, and that is absolutely essential to health and strength.

Many persons have found that Grape-Nuts food is not only nourishing but is a great appetizer. Even children like the taste of it and grow strong and rosy from its use.

It is especially the food to make a weak stomach strong and create an appetite for dinner.

"I am 57 years old," writes a Tenn grandmother, "and have had a weak stomach from childhood. By great care as to my diet I enjoyed a reasonable degree of health, but never found anything to equal Grape-Nuts as a standby.

"When I have no appetite for breakfast and just eat to keep up my strength, I take 4 teaspoonfuls of Grape-Nuts with good rich milk and when dinner comes I am hungry. While if I go without any breakfast I never feel like eating dinner. Grape-Nuts for breakfast seems to make a healthy appetite for dinner.

"My 13-months-old grandson had been very sick with stomach trouble during the past summer, and finally we put him on Grape-Nuts. Now he is growing plump and well. When asked if he wants his nurse or Grape-Nuts, he brightens up and points to the cupboard. He was no trouble to wean at all—thanks to Grape-Nuts." Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

Why Our Lives Are Growing Shorter

by DR. JOHN V. SHOEMAKER

SUCCESSFUL BUSINESS MEN OF TODAY CROWD THE WORK OF TWENTY HOURS INTO TEN SOCIAL DISSIPATION OF ONE KIND OR OTHER
GETTING TO BED TOO LATE KETTNER

IN view of all that has been said about the fall in the death rate, it seems strange to realize that we are not living so long as our grandfathers and grandmothers did. More babies live to grow up nowadays than formerly, but people in later life die faster than they used. Once arrived at adult age, the average man or woman has fewer years of survival to expect, since their physical vigor and vitality are less able to throw off disease than would have been the case half a century ago.

This seems, on the face of it, so surprising a statement that, in order to be accepted, it should be backed up by data authentic and indisputable. Such data are furnished by the figures of the insurance companies (which all agree on the point), but it is easier to refer to the government census reports, which tell the tale in simple and convincing fashion. Not only are people living less long than they did half a century ago, but the decrease in longevity is progressive. Even during the last 15 years the death rate among all persons over 55 years of age, of both sexes, has risen very considerably.

In Part 1 of the third volume of the United States census will be found a tabulated statement which shows in a very striking way the rise in the death rate for all ages from 60 up. I have brought the figures up to date, with the help of fresh information from Washington—a matter of no little importance, inasmuch as the increase has been marked. Thus corrected for accuracy, the reckoning shows that there has been this increase in the death rate for the entire United States:

For people of ages from 60 to 64, seven per cent.

For people of ages from 65 to 69, 6½ per cent.

For people of ages from 70 to 74, 16½ per cent.

For people of ages from 75 to 79, seven per cent.

For people of ages from 80 to 84, 15 per cent.

For people of ages from 85 to 89, 12 per cent.

For people of ages from 90 to 94, 30½ per cent.

For people of 95 and up, 20½ per cent.

These figures tell the story more clearly than the most eloquent discourse on the subject. They show that, notwithstanding improved medical knowledge and the benefits of modern sanitation, we are dying earlier than our grandparents did. The reason why offers a topic for considerable discussion and is not to be summed up in a word, but one may discover it without much difficulty in the more complex and luxurious life that we lead. The lives of our forebears were comparatively simple and their constitutions, unweakened by the luxury and intense nervous strain of an existence like that of to-day, were stronger than ours and better able to withstand the approaches of disease.

Plenty of proof of this fact may be found in the vital statistics of our population, especially in the cities, the figures showing that, while the death rate from diseases common to children has enormously diminished, within the last few years, the mortality from maladies more properly belonging to later life, such as heart disease, apoplexy, cancer and ailments of the liver and kidneys, has risen to an alarming extent. Nay, more, it is still going up and seems likely to continue to increase.

The average baby born to-day has a chance of reaching five years of age better by 50 per cent, than would have been the case half a century ago. Its prospect of escaping the diseases of childhood and growing up is vastly improved, as compared with earlier days.

Now, it is very desirable to save the babies and one of the greatest triumphs of our newer civilization is the successful rearing of three human infants for every two that survived half a century ago. But it is undeniable that the race as a whole suffers by the change, inasmuch as the weaklings, instead of being weeded out, are thus enabled to grow up. These weaklings not only propagate other weaklings, but, by reason of their inferior vigor of constitution, commonly fail to reach old age. In this fact, doubtless, is found one cause of the rise in the death rate in later life.

Nothing surely could well be more strange than the spectacle presented to our view of a great and increasing acceleration of the sweep of the dread scythe among people beyond middle age, while multitudes of children are constantly escaping who must formerly have succumbed. In both cases, too, it is our advanced and perfected civilization that furnishes the cause, rescuing the young but mowing down the old. So far, indeed, does the harm neutralize the good that, notwithstanding all the achievements of modern hygiene and medical discovery, it is doubtful whether the average prospective lifetime of all is much greater than was the case for those living 50 years ago.

Most of us do not realize, perhaps, how much more complicated life is than it used to be. The typical successful business man of to-day crowds the work of 20 hours into 10 hours and only leaves his office to plunge into social dissipation of one kind or another, eating too much, drinking too much, smoking too much, going to bed too late, and keeping his nervous system continually on the rack until, all at once, it breaks down. Incidentally, his digestion becomes impaired, his vital organs suffer irritation, which is often the beginning of disease, and his circulation is clogged, threatening apoplexy. No wonder, then, that in many an instance he dies suddenly, while yet in the prime of life.

Sudden deaths are much more common than they used to be. The high pressure of modern life, with its keen competition and intense strain, is the chief cause. The busy merchant drives his body machine beyond its capacity and suddenly it collapses. Heart disease or apoplexy the attack may be, according to the physician's diagnosis, but it is really over-driving that is accountable for the mischief. The strenuous life is all very well, but it is liable in these days to be carried too far. I have known several tragic incidents of the kind within the last few years—one of them the case of a gentleman whom I had earnestly advised to lead a more simple life. "Nature," I said to him, "did not provide you with a machine capable of enduring such use. You have so many hours for sleep, so many for work and so many for recreation; you must arrange them accordingly." But he kept on at the same gait, and, not long ago, while speaking at a dinner on board a steamship that was entering the harbor of New York, he dropped dead. A blood-vessel had given way.

When the body-machine is weakened by over- it cannot withstand the hostile germ life which it cannot withstand the hostile germ life which it is obliged to encounter. In other words, its power of resistance is diminished. And when the hours that should be devoted to healthful recreation are given up to the enervating dissipations of club and social life there is a double drain upon the vitality. Many business men nowadays are kept under such continual nervous strain that they resort to stimulants in working hours and it is this sort of abuse, combined with constant and racking excitement, that has earned for paresis recognition as a brain disease to which stock brokers are peculiarly liable—so much so, indeed, that it might be called broker's insanity.

The conditions of luxury under which most of us live—for these are days when even the poor man enjoys comforts such as were unobtainable by the rich half a century ago—have a tendency to weaken our constitutions and impair our vitality. Our houses are overheated and even the vehicles in which we ride are often warmed almost to suffocation. Thus we have become like hothouse plants and, if by chance exposed to a current of cool air, we catch cold, or perhaps contract bronchitis or pneumonia, a trifling change of temperature cutting our lives short in a twinkling. Or, again, it may be that a like cause will bring congestion of the kidneys, leading to disease of those organs proving eventually fatal.

Not long ago, while traveling, I chanced to stop at a village on the river Rhine, where I found an astonishing number of old people. There were a dozen over 100 years of age and many from 80 years old up to the century mark; yet straight and vigorous. One woman nearly a hundred years old was earning her living by picking hops; her grandchildren were middle-aged. It was quite wonderful. But there was no mystery about it; it was merely the effect of a simple life spent largely in the fields, with plain diet, consisting of a few vegetables and fruits, little meat, and native beer and wine for beverages.

Nothing can be more obvious than that the very complexity of our modern civilization is shortening our lives. But of all the evils that afflict us the worst and most destructive are hurry and worry. Hurry drives the body machine beyond its capacity, while worry racks it inwardly. Of the two worry is probably the worse. This might, indeed, be called the age of worry. Because of the intense nervous strain to which we are subjected we do vastly more worrying than did our forebears. The average man of to-day is continually surrounded and pursued by phantom troubles, which, though few of them ever materialize into realities, haunt him continually, ruining his peace of mind and injuring his health.

Worry is not only distressing, but positively dangerous. It is the fruitful cause of many brain diseases and is often the beginning of disorders of the nervous system. Men worry about money matters, about business and about family affairs. It becomes a habit, growing by what it feeds on, so that the victim, with nothing on earth to bother him perhaps, looks around to discover something to worry about. If there is nothing else to be found, he will worry about his own health, or about his salvation in the next world. Worry is one of the most important factors in the development of kidney troubles.

It may be said in conclusion that the fact, shown by the census figures of 1900, that people in rural districts live longer than residents of the cities affords rather a striking illustration of the influence of the complex existence upon longevity. If we are "dying at the top," as seems to be the case, the misfortune is unquestionably attributable to inherent defects in the civilization of which we are so proud. We have more amusements, travel faster, are more daintily fed, wear finer clothes and are surrounded by more comfort and luxury than any generation that has preceded us; but we pay for all these things literally with our lives, which, as if by the working out of some inexorable law of compensation, have been considerably shortened already and seemingly show a tendency to become progressively shorter and shorter still.

TRIP ON THE GREAT EASTERN

Famous Steamship an Extremely Comfortable Boat So Long as She Kept Going.

"You can say what you please about the old Great Eastern," said an American who has crossed the ocean twice or more every year for almost half a century, "but she was a grand idea. The trouble was that the idea was almost 50 years ahead of its time. It has take the world all that time to grow up to a Great Eastern as exemplified by the Lusitania and the Mauretania.

"I made my first voyage to Europe in the Great Eastern. That was in 1863. It was the first time the vessel sailed into Liverpool. She had accommodations for 10,000 passengers, but there were only 100 in her on that trip.

"You know she had both a propeller and paddlewheels. As long as she kept going it was all right, for she moved along steadily and majestically; but one day we were hailed by a small French steamer that had mail to send to Europe and we stopped short in midocean while a boat put out from the other vessel.

"Well, how it happened I don't know, but the huge mountain of a vessel seemed to lose her balance. She wabbled about there in a dreadful fashion. Passengers and stewards were hurled about in every direction, and as for crockery, I don't believe a whole plate or cup and saucer was saved from the wreckage.

"On the vessel was every sort of general cargo, including live stock, and as for provisions, why, we had better food and fresher than you can get on a liner to-day. We had absolutely fresh meat, fresh milk and freshly killed chickens.

"Even in speed the Great Eastern was in advance of her time, for it took us only eight days to get to Liverpool."

90,000 AMERICAN SETTLERS GO TO CANADA

THE YEAR 1909 HAS SHOWN AN INCREASE OF OVER EIGHTY PER CENT IN AMERICAN SETTLEMENT.

Recent advices from Canada, our next door neighbour, the neighbourly country across the boundary line, are that upwards of ninety thousand settlers from the United States went into Western Canada during the past year, most of them for the purpose of taking up and settling upon the vacant lands, 160 acres of which are given free by the government, and lands adjoining held by railway and land companies are selling at from nine to fifteen and twenty dollars per acre. Even if thirty and forty dollars per acre were paid, the price would be low, as the lands produce wonderfully, and at these higher figures there is a large interest on the money and labor invested. The ninety thousand settlers of last year, followed about sixty thousand of the previous year, and for several years the number has been running into these large figures. There must be a reason for it. It may be found in the single phrase, "they are satisfied." Nothing attracts people more than the success of others, and the news of this reaching other thousands, causes them to investigate. The investigation in this case is always satisfactory. The splendid land of Iowa, of Indiana, of Nebraska, Kansas, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Michigan, Ohio and other States has risen to a high value, and it is worth every dollar asked for it. But there is not room now for all on these lands. With the ever increasing demand for grain, there comes the ever increasing demand for land. Canada is the only country on the continent in a position to supply it. Land there that costs, say fifteen dollars an acre, produces on a reasonable calculation, 25 bushels of wheat to the acre, or about $20.00. The most liberal calculation as to cost makes the cost to produce $7.50 per acre, leaving a balance of $12.50 per acre. The $7.50 carries good wages for the farmer, and all other conceivable contingencies. With conditions like this, covering the entire area of about 500,000 square miles, it is readily understood why 90,000 Americans should follow the sixty thousand of the previous year. Canadian Government Agencies at different points in the Union are always ready to give information regarding the free homestead lands, ready to advise the settler as to the districts which would suit him best.

"Well, he wasn't disappointed. The next day, in a prominent place on the first page of the Enterprise, I inserted this paragraph:

"'John H. Ferguson's Christmas gifts to his wife are being much admired. They include a diamond stomacher and many other beautiful specimens of cut glass.'"

Answer This Question

When shown positive and reliable proof that a certain remedy had cured numerous cases of female ills, wouldn't any sensible woman conclude that the same remedy would also benefit her if suffering with the same trouble?

Here are two letters which prove the efficiency of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Fitchville, Ohio.—"My daughter was all run down, suffered from pains in her side, head and limbs, and could walk but a short distance at a time. She came very near having nervous prostration, had begun to cough a good deal, and seemed melancholy by spells. She tried two doctors but got little help. Since taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, Blood Purifier and Liver Pills she has improved so much that she feels and looks like another girl."—Mrs. C. Cole, Fitchville, Ohio.

Irasburg, Vermont.—"I feel it my duty to say a few words in praise of your medicine. When I began taking it I had been very sick with kidney and bladder troubles and nervous prostration. I am now taking the sixth bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and find myself greatly improved. My friends who call to see me have noticed a great change."—Mrs. A. H. Sanborn, Irasburg, Vermont.

What more proof can any one ask?

For 30 years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been the standard remedy for female ills. No sick woman does justice to herself who will not try this famous medicine. Made exclusively from roots and herbs, and has thousands of cures to its credit.

CONSERVATION PROCLAMATION

Governor Eberhart Issues Official Call for the First State Congress to Promote Agricultural Improvement and Conservation.

St. Paul, Jan. 19.—Governor A. O. Eberhart today issued a proclamation calling the first annual Minnesota Conservation Congress to meet in the municipal auditorium at St. Paul, March 16, 17, 18 and 19, 1910. The proclamation is as follows:

That an era of new and complex development is opening in Minnesota there is no doubt. The soil and climate of the state are second to none. There exists within the borders of this state untold opportunities for the development of farms, mines, forests, water power, reclamation of swamp lands and construction of roads as well as the necessity of more railroad lines.

To determine by a congress of representative men, interested in all lines of business and social endeavor, what the resources of this state are and how the rapid and intelligent development of Minnesota may best be assisted, will contribute greatly to the advancement of this commonwealth to the front rank of the states.

Gov. Adolph O. Eberhart.

The development of unused lands; conservation of soil fertility of lands now under cultivation; increase of production per acre on the farms; careful handling of mineral resources to eliminate waste; preservation and perpetuation of the forests; scientific drainage of swamp lands; improvement of public roads; extension of industrial and agricultural education; study of the practicability of water power and the continuance of the best sanitary conditions to insure public health, are all subjects which must be considered and agitated in order to give force to a state wide movement for the development of Minnesota.

A New Era of Pioneering.

The time is here for a new era of pioneering. Men and women are coming into the west and northwest as in the days of old, but they must come and expect to come without facing the hardships endured by the first pioneers. They will open the virgin regions of Minnesota, creating new wealth and at once contributing to public maintenance. How to assist these people to the advantages enjoyed by the older and more highly developed regions, giving them good roads, educational institutions, transportation facilities, mail routes, healthful surroundings, telephone lines and markets in which to buy and sell, is one of the problems which citizens of Minnesota may well consider in a meeting of representative men and women.

For many years parts of this state have been severely subjected to single cropping. Thousands of farms have been compelled to yield year after year the same crops until the soil is wearing out and profits have undoubtedly been reduced. These soils must be given back the elements of plant life or they will cease to pay dividends on the increasing valuation.

Vast Timber Resources.

While the state of Minnesota has vast timber and boundless mineral resources, agriculture is a condition to control, to a large measure, the industrial activity of the people in towns and cities. Only a little more than one-third of the land in the state suitable for agricultural purposes is now under cultivation. These lands should be opened and handled to insure the best returns to the tiller of the soil.

Another demand has followed this. The farmers should be given every possible opportunity to secure the knowledge of practical, scientific agriculture, the profits to be gained by crop rotation; the increase possible by creative and selective breeding of plants and animals. These things generally known and applied will result in immense improvements in production.

Knowledge of Live Stock Needed.

To develop and extend the dairying industry necessitates more general discussion and knowledge of breeding live stock. Great progress has already been made in this state and if the work is encouraged and extended, Minnesota will have in ten years a profitable market in other states and abroad for high priced cattle which combine milk and beef.

Good roads must be built to enable Minnesota producers to meet the competition of other producers in states having better transportation facilities, nearer markets and improved country roads. The cost of hauling our products from the farm to the market is excessive in comparison with the railroad charge for hauling similar products and will remain in excess of the cost in other states unless our roads are improved. Practical, intelligent work on the highways of the state will reduce the cost from a half to two-thirds, broaden the scope of the farmer's market and add to the profits.

Water Power Development.

The source of many rivers and with thousands of lakes scattered over its broad domain, Minnesota has unquestioned opportunities for the development of water power. Discussion of these unharnessed streams and their possibilities by practical engineers is to be desired that the people may realize that it rests with them whether they shall have cheap power and at the same time conserve the fuel resources of the state.

At once one of the healthiest regions in the United States, the natural advantage undoubtedly needs guarding in the cities, in the homes and school houses. How best the public health may be preserved and improved is a question for wide discussion which will have for a result general education of the people to desire and secure the most healthful conditions everywhere.

The impractical idea of taking a boy from the farm to teach him farming is overcome by incorporating in the courses of the rural school, the elements of practical, scientific agriculture and with the study goes industrial training for the boys and domestic science and art for the girls of the farm. The extension of these studies and how the system can be best fostered by consolidation of these schools, is a subject worthy of the most earnest consideration.

Value of Farmers' Institutes.

Experience has shown that farmers' institutes, the so-called "short courses" and similar meetings have had a wide influence, adding not only millions to the value of production, but improving the conditions of life. That the citizens of Minnesota should join in such a movement for conservation and agricultural development seems fitting when the governments of earth have come to deem expenditures of time and money for research, discussion and agitation looking toward the creation of a strong public sentiment for better living, more important than any other line of work.

Taking into account, therefore these vital considerations for the welfare of the state, I hereby proclaim the holding of the Minnesota Conservation and Agricultural Development Congress, in the municipal auditorium, in the city of St. Paul, on March 16, 17, 18 and 19, 1910, and earnestly invite the entire citizenship of the state to participate and co-operate in carrying out the plans for this gathering that its purposes may be fully realized.

—ADOLPH O. EBERHART,
Governor.

Sauk Center.—Sauk lake is being robbed of all its fish and will soon be without any, if action is not taken immediately. Most of this fishing is illegal; as many of the men are fishing without licenses.

This lake is seven miles long and formerly abounded with game fish. It has a magnificent shore line and is very picturesque, both in winter and summer.

Fight Against Plague Goes On.

Although the survey of the past year's anti-tuberculosis work shows that much has been done, the reports from all parts of the country indicate that this year the amount of money to be expended, and the actual number of patients that will be treated will be more than double that of the past year. For instance, special appropriations have been made in the various municipalities for next year's anti-tuberculosis work, aggregating $3,976,500. In addition to these appropriations over $4,000,000 has been set aside by the different state legislatures for the campaign against tuberculosis this year. Besides these sums, a large number of the present existing institutions and associations are planning enlargements of their work, and new organizations are being formed daily.

"James turned on her excitedly. 'What, wear that old brown cloth thing another season? I guess not!' he exclaimed, vehemently. 'You go right down to your tailor's today and order something handsome. Remember, please, that as my wife you have a certain position to maintain!'

"The wife bowed her head in submission. On her lips played a peculiar smile."—Lippincott's Magazine.

WESTERN CANADA
What Prof. Shaw, the Well-Known Agriculturist, Says About It:

"I would sooner raise cattle in Western Canada than in the corn belt of the United States. Feed is cheaper and climate better for the purpose. Your market will improve faster than your farmers will produce the supplies. Wheat can be grown up to the 60th parallel (800 miles north of the International boundary). Your vacant land will be taken at a rate beyond present conception. We have enough people in the United States alone who want homes to take up this land." Nearly

70,000 Americans

will enter and make their homes in Western Canada this year.

1909 produced another large crop of wheat, oats and barley, in addition to which the cattle exports was an immense item.

Cattle raising, dairying, mixed farming and grain growing in the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

Free homestead and pre-emption areas, as well as lands held by railway and land companies, will provide homes for millions.

Adaptable soil, healthful climate, splendid schools and churches, and good railways.

When He Courted You

He didn't complain if you were a little despondent or irritable at times. Now he does. He's the same man. He didn't understand then. He doesn't now. Then he thought it was caprice and liked it. Now he thinks it is caprice and doesn't like it. But now he's busy getting money.

If he realized the full truth he would be more than anxious to have the wife he loves take the right remedy to restore her to true womanly health. Most men don't know that when a woman is weak, nervous, irritable and despondent, there is invariably something radically wrong with the delicate feminine organs with which her entire physique is in sensitive sympathy.

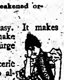
There is one, and just one remedy, tried and proven, that will put things right when the feminine organism is weak or diseased. It is

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription.

This medicine restores perfect health to the weakened organs, and makes them strong.

It makes wifehood happy, and motherhood easy. It makes child-birth short and almost painless. It helps to make real "new women." An honest druggist won't urge upon you a substitute.

This "Favorite Prescription" is a pure glyceric extract of native medicinal roots and contains no alcohol, injurious or habit-forming drugs. A full list of its ingredients printed on its outside wrapper and attested as full and correct under oath.



Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets regulate and strengthen Stomach, Liver and Bowels. Easy to take as candy.

ED MALONEY KILLED AT CROOKSTON

Fell From Bridge at Crookston Saturday and Died Sunday Morning.

Had Lived in Red Lake Falls and Had Many Friends In This City.

Friends in this city were pained to learn of the tragic death of Edward Maloney, who died in St. Vincent's hospital, Crookston, Sunday morning as the result of a fall Saturday afternoon from the Northern Pacific railway bridge to the river bank below.

Mr. Maloney was working with a bridge crew repairing the bridge. He was pulling bolts on the outer edge of the bridge. A bolt could not be pried up and a chain was attached to it and a jack used. Maloney was using the jack when the bolt suddenly broke and he fell over the edge of the bridge. When part way down to the ground he struck a longitudinal brace and the blow crushed his chest, internal injuries resulting. When picked up, Maloney was conscious and it was not thought necessary to remove him to a hospital. However, late Saturday night there were alarming symptoms and he was taken to the hospital. He died at 11 o'clock Sunday morning.

Mr. Maloney was a graduate of the Crookston high school in the class of 1901. He was a popular boy and won local fame as a foot ball star. After his graduation from high school he lived in Red Lake Falls with his uncle, John Manley, for a number of years. The remains were taken to Rushford, Minn., Monday and the funeral was held in that city.

WILL BE BIGGEST DITCH IN THE STATE

Hearing on Judicial Ditch No. 11 Will Be Held at Warren February 26.

Will Drain Hundreds of Thousands of Acres in Marshall and Beltrami Counties.

The hearing on the petition for the construction of Judicial Ditch No. 11 will be held before Judge Grindeland in the Marshall county court house at Warren Saturday, Feb. 26, at which the report of the engineer and the report of the viewers will be heard.

This is the greatest piece of ditching ever undertaken in the state. The ditch will have over two hundred branches and there will be several hundred miles of ditches in the network. The estimated total cost of the work is $530,000.00 and it is estimated that 265,000 acres of land in Marshall and Beltrami counties will be drained. More than 5,500,000 cubic yards of earth will be removed during the course of construction, it is estimated. It is said that nearly every quarter section of land in eastern Marshall county will be benefited by the construction of the ditch.

The ditch will drain a country that is so flat and low that it never becomes dry enough so it can be cultivated. The possibility of making tillable land in this vast area is what induced the big ditching undertaking.

ANNUAL MEETING

Charities and Correction to be Held at Mankato This Month.

The Eighteenth Minnesota State Conference of Charities and Correction to be held at Mankato, Friday to Monday, Feb. 11th-14th, will be something out of the usual. A feature of the conference will be two joint sessions held with the Minnesota Teachers' Association. The indications are that the county commissioners will be there in large numbers.

The conference is a school in matters relating to charitable, correctional and social questions. It aims not only to give instruction but it is really a missionary agency in intelligent work of this kind. One difficulty about social matters is that people are liable to plunge into them without any sort of study of the subject. Emotional people are liable to think that they can do such things without training. They get to thinking their emotionalism is sympathy, when, as a matter of fact, it is a variety of selfishness. The conference is of special interest to county commissioners, relief agents, managers of benevolent institutions, county and city superintendents of schools sheriffs, judges of probate, officers of juvenile courts, and all engaged or interested in charitable or correctional work. Among the subjects to be considered this year are child labor, boys' clubs, truancy in rural schools, study of racial types, tuberculosis, industrial accidents, outdoor relief, supervision and inspection by county commissioners, probate law, the place of the home in rural development, the economic and social improvement of country districts, and the financial support of highways. People who will be present are Gov. Eberhart; Mr. Schultz, state superintendent of education; one or more members of the State Board of Control; W. E. McEwen, state labor commissioner; Professors Jenks and Coulter of the State University; A. J. Eckstein of New Ulm; Rev. J. A. Ryan of St. Paul's Seminary; Senator Clague; Prof. Maxwell of the State Normal School, Winona; Mrs. Andreas Ueland, Minneapolis; Miss Patterson, superintendent of visiting nurses, Minneapolis; Dr. Tomlinson, St. Peter; Judge Hughes, Mankato; P. N. Allen, Cannon Falls, and Fred Johnson, New Ulm. Mr. F. A. Weld, president State Normal School, is president of the Conference; Mr. J. N. Tate, superintendent State School for Deaf, Faribault, vice president, and Miss Ellen Cook, registrar Associated Charities, St. Paul, secretary.

MOVING BIG STOCKS

Garceau & Hubertus and E. A. Mittwer Swapping Locations This Week.

The Garceau & Hubertus stock of general merchandise is this week being moved into the Paradis block recently purchased by Theodore Garceau. E. A. Mittwer, whose hardware store has been located in the Paradis block, is moving his stock to the building being vacated by Garceau & Hubertus and recently purchased by J. A. Duffy. Making the exchange of the two big stocks is a big job and a large number of men have been employed at the work during the week. It is expected that by the end of the week the work will be completed. In the meantime the trade at the stores is being looked after as well as possible under the circumstances.

STATE LAND SALE TO BE HELD IN MAY

State Auditor Iverson Will Conduct Sale in Red Lake Falls.

School Lands Will be Offered for Sale on Very Easy Terms.

State Auditor S. G. Iverson will be in Red Lake Falls May 21, to offer state school lands at public sale. This will be the only opportunity to buy these lands, for the lands will not be sold at private sale. The sale will commence at 10:30 in the forenoon.

No land will be sold at less than its appraised value and in no case for less than $5.00 per acre. At time of purchase 15 per cent of the purchase price and interest at 4 per cent on the unpaid balance to June 1, 1910, must be paid. Purchaser must also pay the value of the merchantable timber on the land. The annual rate of interest on the balance will be 5 per cent if the balance is paid within ten years. The purchaser of land in order to perfect title will be required to comply with one of three conditions. He may fence and convert into pasture 25 per cent of the land, or cultivate 5 per cent of the land, or build a house and actually occupy the land. Not more than 320 acres will be sold to one purchaser.

WOULD DICTATE TO GOVERNOR EBERHART

State Officials Make Unusual Demands of the Chief Executive.

Condition of Affairs at State School for Blind at Faribault.

[Special Correspondence to Red Lake Falls Gazette.]

St. Paul, Jan. 31—Official insubordination at Washington resulted in the dismissal from the public service of Gifford Pinchot and Mr. Glavis. Public sentiment approved those dismissals—not because Mr. Pinchot or Mr. Glavis' disinterestedness or zeal in the public service was questioned, but because it was plain that unless minor officials cooperated with the heads of their departments and those heads with the chief executive nothing but confusion and inefficiency could result.

An Insolent Demand.

In St. Paul we have witnessed during the past week the deplorable spectacle of the heads of the subordinate departments officered by republicans assuming the right to criticize the official acts of the chief executive of the state and to call him to account for the manner in which he has discharged the grave and responsible duties intrusted to him. They called on him to demand that in future he consult them before taking the initiative in matters peculiarly within his own province; and that they be given a voice in dictating the policy the governor is to pursue.

The Governor Patient.

It is greatly to the governor's credit that he heard them through and permitted them to formulate their extraordinary demands without interruption. A more impulsive or a less courteous gentleman would have promptly showed them the door; and public sentiment would have upheld him. Unfortunately the situation is such under our form of government there is no other method of disciplining insubordinate elective officers. Otherwise Governor Eberhart would have been quite justified in dismissing his meddlesome subordinates from the public service. The governor has done all that could be expected from him under the circumstances. He made it plain that he resented their intrusion, and that in the discharge of his responsible duties he would be governed not by the demands of candidates for public position who sought to use the executive patronage to bolster their political fortunes, but by the wishes of the people, the welfare of those great interests which have been committed to his keeping and the good of the institutions of the state.

The State University Attacked.

It is not surprising to learn that the governor's self-constituted advisors should have made one of the great educational institutions of the state the subject of their unwarranted attack. Nothing less it appears would satisfy them than permission to discipline a member of the board of regents who had frustrated a scheme of theirs to use the patronage of the state fair for party advantage and to make this department of the state the football of politics. Because B. F. Nelson had proved unwilling to permit the use of unfair means to seat in the presidency of the state agricultural association a Republican machine politician the demand was made on Governor Eberhart that he suspend Mr. Nelson on the board of regents of the state university.

Contrasting Methods.

There is a marked contrast between the attitude assumed by the state officials in question and that of the Democratic heads of department under similar circumstances. The other day when a vacancy occured in the office of executive agent of the game and fish commission, the Democratic members of that body did not take advantage of their numerical superiority to dictate to the governor the appointment of the official in question. On the contrary they at once freely and without hesitation placed at the disposal of Governor Eberhart the patronage the governor of the state has been accustomed to dispense. He was asked to name the executive agent. No attempt was made to influence his decision.

Another Instance.

The same course was pursued by the head of the banking department. Technically he has the right to name his subordinates. The Governor would probably not have attempted to interfere with him had he chosen to exercise that right. But a fine sense of the courtesy due the chief executive of the state and a proper regard for official discipline dictated a different course. The fact that a vacancy existed has brought to the attention of the governor and his wishes were consulted. The result is that both of these departments are working in harmony with the office of the chief executive to the manifest advantage of the public service.

Criticising the Governor.

Other matters touched upon in the conference forced upon the governor by subordinate officials at the state capitol were the public expositions of his policy made from time to time as occasion arose by Governor Eberhart. The view was presented to the governor that he should consult the heads of the various departments when those heads happen to be Republicans before taking the public into his confidence. They wanted to exercise both a censorship over his utterances and a veto over his appointments. They complained that the governor was entirely too free with his opinions. They even went so far as to protest that in defending himself against the charges made by Mr. Heatwole the governor was impolitic, as if a man should submit supinely to charges by which his official integrity was impugned. Why should not the governor indignantly refute these charges if they are untrue and produce the evidence to confound his traducers?

Smothering Insurgency.

While in Washington Governor Eberhart took occasion to assure President Taft of the support of Minnesota in the politics he had outlined, and to inform him that the criticism which had greeted his Winona speech had been greatly modified—in short that Insurgency in the North Star state is a diminishing quantity. In this the governor unquestionably reflected the sentiment of the Republican leaders in Minnesota. Among them insurgency is unpopular. There is no room for doubt that, as a result of Governor Eberhart's joining with President Taft to secure party solidarity, the voice of insurgency, as far as its finding any utterance through the party organization is concerned, has been effectually stilled.

Governor Johnson's Life.

It is expected that the life of Governor Johnson which has been prepared by Frank Day and Theodore Knappen will be issued from the press within a few days. Reports of canvassers indicate that its success is more than assured and that it will have a phenomenal sale. Those who have not already secured a copy from the local agent should lose no time in doing so before the edition is exhausted. The book is sold only by subscription.

W. E. PURCELL MAY SUCCEED SENATOR THOMPSON REPORTED RESIGNED.

ILL HEALTH THE CAUSE

Newly Appointed Senator Incapacitated by Sickness Gives Up Toga—Purcell Picked at National Capital.

Washington, Jan. 27.—The resignation of United States Senator Thompson of North Dakota is said by the wise ones here to be in the inside pocket of Governor Burke. The same unconfirmed rumor that is responsible for this statement is authority for the further one that State Senator Purcell of Wahpeton will be the successor of Thompson.

After Senator Thompson's appointment, following the long contest for the place left vacant by the death of Senator M. N. Johnson, reports of the ill-health of the senator soon became rife. Early after his arrival in the national capital it was reported he had several hemorrhages and his physicians advised him to go to Mexico for the winter.

Hon. W. E. PURCELL.
Reported to be North Dakota's New Senator.
Courtesy of Fargo Forum.

It is asserted that he wrote Governor Burke regarding his resignation but the letter requested him to defer action till the governor's arrival here last week. There was a conference at which it is claimed the senator tendered his resignation and an understanding was reached through which Purcell was to be named.

It is claimed that nothing was to be given out till after Governor Burke's return to North Dakota and it is difficult to get North Dakotans now in the capital to discuss the situation although the report is generally credited.

Mr. Purcell was the candidate who was thought to have had the inside track til Thompson was named by Governor Burke.

MURDERED HIS FATHER.

Puts Strychnine in Whiskey and Gives Father Drink.

Minot, N. D., Jan. 27.—One of the most brutal murders ever brought to light in northwestern North Dakota, was unearthed yesterday, when Chris. Moline, the 23-year-old son of Frank Moline, confessed to the murder of his father.

Moline left Barton, Pierce county, Friday in good health, dying on the way to his home, four miles in the country. The son drove the horses to their home, unharnessed and later returned after the body, the apparent cause of the death being heart failure.

At the inquest started Saturday, remarks were overheard which led Sheriff Erickson to believe that a murder had been committed and yesterday the son was forced to confess.

According to his story he and his mother, who had been divorced from Mr. Moline, were afraid that Moline was about to remarry, leaving all his property to his new wife. The son said that he meant to murder both the woman and his father, but had only gotten his father. He put ten cents worth of strychnine in a small bottle of whiskey and offered his father a drink just before leaving town.

SUICIDE AT TOWER CITY.

F. S. Kiff, Son of Prominent Temperance Worker, Cuts Throat.

Tower City, N. D., Jan. 28.—F. B. Kiff of this city, a son of M. H. Kiff, the well known temperance man and general merchant of Tower City, was found dead in his bed yesterday morning at an early hour with his throat cut from ear to ear.

The suicide had been in ill health for some time. He and his wife and little daughter occupied the same room, but slept in separate beds, the little girl sleeping with her mother. A light was kept burning in the room, as Kiff had to get up in the night to take medicine.

No Cut at Grand Forks.

Grand Forks, N. D., Jan. 27.—The meat boycott, which is prevalent throughout all the large cities of the country, and which was started by the labor unions in order to get more reasonable prices for this important article of food, has not struck Grand Forks as yet, but it is expected that the matter will reach here in due time. The local butchers have reported this afternoon that they had made absolutely no cut in prices as yet. One of them stated however that he could notice a slight falling off in the buying of meals and stated that the difference was steadily growing.

Six Buried in Collapse.

Cincinnati, Jan. 27.—Six persons were in a rooming house at 428 West Fourth street, which was demolished when the wall of a five-story was blown down by a 45 mile wind last night. Of the six, one is dead, another is missing, and four were injured. The police and firemen were still searching the ruins for possible additional victims today.

Yale Professor Passes Away.

New York, Jan. 27.—Prof. Ed. Reynolds, of the Yale university law school, died from pneumonia here today.

HILL VISITS PRESIDENT

PRESIDENT DECLARES REPORTED CRUSADE A MYTH.

After Conference With Noted Railroad Man Taft Puts Quietus on Sensational Rumors.

Washington, Jan. 25.—President Taft today made public the following statement as to his reported crusade against corporations:

"No statement was issued, either from the attorney general's office or the White House indicating that the purpose of the administration with reference to the prosecutions under the anti-trust law is other than as set forth in the message of the president of Jan. 7, 1910. The sensational statements, as if there were to be a new department and an indiscriminate prosecution of important industries, have no foundation. The purpose of the administration is exactly as already stated in the president's message."

The statement was issued after the president had talked with Jas. J. Hill, the railway magnate and had received information that prices were crumbling in New York under the various reports printed yesterday and this morning.

There were no further statements from the White House except the foregoing.

Hill, on leaving the White House, said he did not pretend to represent or speak for the president in anything, but was sure that the president would not attack the corporations. If the corporations were violating the laws of the country, Hill said he supposed that they would be brought to book.

TROOPS FIGHT FLOOD.

Fifty Thousand Soldiers in Paris Aid Municipal Authorities.

Paris, Jan. 25.—Fifty thousand soldiers, comprising the garrison of Paris, were placed at the disposal of the municipal authorities this morning to fight the floods whose ravages are spreading ruin and consternation throughout the city. At 8 this morning the water at Port Royal had touched 26 feet above low tide and was rising at a rate of nearly one-half inch an hour with the prospect of the rise continuing until midnight.

The damage already done is incalculable. The industrial life of the city is rapidly becoming paralyzed. Only two sections of the subway are in operation while three-fourths of the surface lines are tied up. Factories are shutting down because of a lack of power due to electric plants having been flooded. Half of the telephones in the city are out of commission and telegraph and railroad communication is demoralized.

The weather in Paris grows worse rather than better and at noon Paris was the center of an area of low pressure and a bitter cold rain and sleet were falling throughout the flooded regions, adding to the suffering of poor and homeless ones.

The price of bread and other foods has increased, owing to the fact that communication with the provinces is crippled. No trains from the south are coming beyond Choisy-Le-Roi.

The depleted supply of drinking water has caused the greatest alarm. With the rise of the flood but a few inches higher, the pumping stations still in operation must stop and Paris in the midst of a minature ocean, will be without water fit to drink.

The situation at between twenty and thirty suburban towns above this city is worse than the capital itself.

VOICE COUNTRY'S NEEDS.

Business Men of United States in Session.

Washington, Jan. 25—Sixty chambers of commerce and boards of trade, voicing the business needs of the nation from as many cities, were represented in the fortieth annual meeting of the national board of trade, which began its sessions here today. Concerted action on live issues of the day will be taken and expressions of the national body, indicative of the sentiment of the business interests, will be given in the form of resolutions proposing some legislation favoring some new proposed laws and asking for the repeal of some now in force.

Twelve of the largest bodies come with strong resolutions calling unequivocally for a ship subsidy to promote an American merchant marine.

Twelve others will call for a forward march on harbor and river improvements.

Others, while divided somewhat in opinion of methods, stand for the conservation of natural resources.

Beef Probe Spreading.

Chicago, Ill., Jan. 25.—Other organizations of the so-called "Beef Trust" than the National Packing Co., may be included in the federal grand jury investigation, according to a report current about the federal building today.

In this connection it became known that the information which came to Judge Landis was in the form of a letter making detailed charges. These charges were of such a nature that Judge Landis immediately reported them to United States District Attorney Edwin W. Sims.

Avalanches in Switzerland.

Berne, Switzerland, Jan. 24.—Immense damage has been done by floods in Switzerland. A dozen avalanches have occurred, in which several chalets were engulfed.

Three Killed by Auto Plunge.

Kansas City, Jan. 25.—Three persons were killed and three seriously injured when an automobile owned and driven by a Kansas City contractor named Maloney, skidded and plunged over a forty-foot embankment at Cliff drive and Agnes avenue late today. Mr. Maloney was one of the killed.

Germany Has Storm.

Berlin, Jan. 25.—Snow continued to fall throughout northern Germany today. Many large towns have been cut off from communication by railway, telegraph and telephone.

President—H. A. Moe, Churchs Ferry.

First Vice President—J. A. White, Edgeley.

CAN'T GET BONDS

ANDY JONES HAS ABANDONED EFFORTS TO GET PERSONAL LIBERTY.

MAY NOT TAKE APPEAL

Fact That Convicted Banker Goes to Leavenworth Taken to Mean That Sentence Will Be Served.

Fargo.—Unable to secure anyone to take the place of Michael Lynch of Grand Forks who withdrew from Andy Jones' bond, Judge Edward, tending counsel for the defense notified U. S. Clerk J. A. Montgomery that it would be impossible to perfect the instrument and that plan to furnish the Rugby bank wrecker his liberty while an appeal is being taken to the circuit court had been abandoned.

As a result Jones will be removed to the federal penitentiary at Leavenworth, Kas., where he will start the service of the decade sentenced imposed by Judge Charles F. Amidon.

Many who have followed the case interpret the inability to secure an appeal bond, to mean that the sentence of the court will be served without protest and that the case will never be taken to the circuit court of appeals.

While Jones was sentenced to ten years in the penitentiary, under the existing rules he will have to serve but six years and eight months if he takes advantage of the "good behavior" allowance.

Just when he will be removed to the federal penitentiary has not been announced and probably won't be. Jones will be in the custody of U. S. Marshal J. F. Shea and a deputy.

BREAKS ALL RECORDS.

Situation in Paris Is Very Alarming—100,000 Refugees.

Paris, Jan. 27.—The River Seine, whose flood has caused death and destruction during the past few days was stationary at noon today. Dead cattle and trees are being borne down its current.

The stage of the waters this morning exceeded all records of 1815 and up to 12 the river continued to rise at a rate of three-quarters of an inch an hour. Hope was given to local authorities by an early report that the Seine was stationary at its upper branches.

At Melun, Nogent and Bray the maximum flood was reached during the night. On the other hand the river Marne was reported as still rising and a new and higher flood was racing down the Younne and Grand Morin.

Perhaps the most alarming features of the situation in the morning was the fissure at Auteuil viaduct at the foot of Paris. Should this give way, it would act as a dam and submerge the entire city.

The valley of the Seine now presents a terrifying spectacle. The flood is miles wide for twenty-five miles above and the remaining torrent runs through the city at the rate of twenty-five miles an hour. It is flush with the parapets of the bridges where it is not actually overflowing them, turning into muddy lagoons and choking the underground workings of the city to a bursting point.

Ballinger Probe Drags.

Washington, Jan. 27.—Just what the charges are that Louis R. Glavis upholds against Richard A. Ballinger, secretary of the interior, were finally made clear to the congressional investigating committee before its first session adjourned yesterday afternoon. Louis D. Brandeis of Boston, special counsel for Glavis, informed the committee upon its insistence of a specific nature of allegations, though maintaining that it was not any one act, but a series of acts and circumstances upon which the charges were based.

Farmers Also in Boycott.

Frankfort, Kas., Jan. 27.—Farmers in this vicinity have started a counter boycott against labor unions that have refused to eat meat and they expect to make it state-wide.

The farmers plan to quit using the products of the labor of boycotting unions for one year. In addition to this they purpose to advocate free trade. Organizers of the movement aver that the packers are back of the meat boycott.

Corporation Tax Law Upheld.

Toledo, Jan. 27.—Judge R. W. Taylor in the United States circuit court today sustained the constitutionality of the federal corporation tax law in a formal order dismissing the suit of a stockholder against the American Multigraph Co. of Cleveland. He sustained the company's demurrer.

This will allow the case to be taken at once to the supreme court for decision.

Would Remove Duty.

Washington, Jan. 27.—Representative Sabbath (dem., Ill.) believes that the way to lower the prices of food stuffs is to place them on the free list for importation from foreign countries. He has introduced a bill to bring this about. His bill would place on the free list articles such as sugar, flour, eggs, vegetables, fish, live-stock and meats of all kinds.

CLOSE LAKOTA BANK.

State Examiner Shuts Up People's State Bank.

Lakota.—The People's State bank of Lakota was ordered closed last night by State Bank Examiner Oliver Knudson.

According to a statement given out today the bank's suspension will be but temporary, and it is expected that the institution will reopen for business shortly.

The state bank examiner, who is now in charge and the bank officials both decline to divulge the nature of the present embarrassment.

McCumber Introduces Resolution.

Washington, Jan. 26.—Senator McCumber of North Dakota wants to know who is getting all the money under the existing high food schedules and in order to arrive at the truth of the situation today offered a resolution in the senate providing for a thorough investigation of the economic consideration involved.

Mexico Banks Suspends.

Mexico City, Jan. 26.—The United States Banking Co. suspended today, following its failure to make a clearing house settlement of yesterday's business.

MINERS MAY QUIT

GREAT COAL STRIKE IN UNITED STATES AND CANADA FEARED.

IT'S UP TO OPERATORS

Unless Every District Operator Signs Up Bituminous Workers in Both Countries Will Walk Out.

Indianapolis, Ind., Jan. 26.—A general strike of the miners of the bituminous coal fields of the United States and Canada will be called if the mine operators of all or any of the districts refuse to sign contracts granting an increase of wages. Such at least was the declaration of many leaders in the convention of the United Mine Workers of America today.

Pres. Thomas L. Lewis in discussing the proposition informed some of the leaders that the entire delegate body should go to Toledo next week for a wage conference with the operators of Ohio, Indiana and western Pennsylvania, urged that wage contracts should not be signed by any districts of the union until all have obtained from the mine operators a uniform increase of wages.

"No one district should slaughter another." Lewis said, "by sending coal into the market while another district was struggling for better wages.

HIGH PRICES SMASHED.

Wide Spread Agitation Kills New York Market.

New York, Jan. 26.—"The market is dead: the agitation against the high prices did it," was the declaration today of a wholesale meat dealer. The action of local markets, both wholesale and retail, confirms the dealer's assertion. Lamb dropped a cent wholesale pork loin 2 cents and some dealers in beef cut prices a cent more a pound. It was said today that the wholesale dealers were stocked with thousands of unsold cuts of dressed beef with supplies still steadily flowing in.

"Beef will be cheaper by the end of the week than it has been in years," said a brother wholesaler. "After that the price won't go lower for the supply will be cut down."

All this is laid to the wide-spread agitation against the use of food products considered to be over-priced. The force of public sentiment is shown in the price drop, the dealers admit.

The grand jury investigation of the food combination, particularly of the alleged milk trust, continued today. District Attorney Whitman continued to look into the cold storage situation on the complaints that the system is largely responsible for the ability of the food dealer artificially to sustain prices in and out of season.

CONDITIONS GROW WORSE.

Flood in France Causes Immense Loss of Property.

Paris, Jan. 26.—The flood situation grows worse hourly. At Point Royal this morning the raging torrent of the Seine of 27 feet, 8 inches above the low water mark, and was rising at a rate of nearly an inch an hour against an hourly rise of less than half an inch yesterday. Although the river marine was reported stationery, at Fretesous, to the east of Paris, the fluvial navigation department declares that the volume of water rushing down from the Yonne and other affluents of the Seine above leaves no hope that the high water mark will be reached before tomorrow morning, when the flood is expected to reach the maximum of 31 feet, or a height greater than was reached by the disastrous flood of 1802.

Premier Briand and Minister of Finance Couchery after a consultation today estimated that the flood losses exceed $200,000,000. Paris has been divided in five sections, each in charge of a military commander, who will control the relief and rescue work. The Seine continued to rise today and the situation grows worse.

FAVOR SHIP SUBSIDY BILL.

National Board of Trade Convention Edorses Several Measures.

Washington, Jan. 26.—When the National board of trade convened today it began taking up the resolutions as they were reported by the various committees. Several organizations represented have submitted an unqualified endorsement of the ship subsidy to support a merchant marine and this subject in all likelihood will be unanimously endorsed.

Postal savings banks, currency reform and conservation, it was expected, would be reported favorably during the day by the committees which had them in charge, the only debate likely to occur being on the form in which the national body shall give its approval.

It also was expected that during the day President La Lanne would appoint a special committee of five to investigate the causes of the present high cost of living.

White Slave Bill Passes House.

Washington, Jan. 26.—By a viva voce vote, the Mann "white slave" bill was passed by the house practically as introduced by Mr. Mann.

Postmasters Appointed.

Washington, Jan. 26.—Postmasters appointed today were T. S. Farr, Hillsboro; Geo. Taney, Napoleon.

Survivors Perish by Cold.

Victoria, B. C., Jan. 26.—News that eight Japanese out of the forty, who survived the wreck of the schooner Koseuku Maru, were frozen to death while eight others were left to a like fate in the Kamchatka wilds has brought by the steamer Aymeric which arrived yesterday. After the wreck the forty began a march without food, losing eight in the first two days, while eight others were abandoned because their faces and feet were frozen. The remaining twenty-four made only twenty-five miles when they were rescued by the Russian steamer Altung.

Cigarette Smoker Dies.

Patagonia, Ariz., Jan. 26.—Mrs. Juana Corona, said to be the oldest person in Arizona, died here yesterday at the age of 116 years. Her youngest surviving child is 60 years old. Mrs. Corona was born in Sonora, Mexico, Oct. 20, 1794. She had been married three times and from her 10th birthday until her death she was a constant user of the cigarette.

IS OF VERY GRAVE IMPORT

FEDERAL GRAND JURY TO INVESTIGATE MEAT TRUST.

Employes and Books of Big Chicago Concerns Will be Taken Before United States Court.

Chicago, Jan. 24.—The work of preparing the case of the government against the four big meat packing concerns of this city, to ascertain whether they have operated to control the prices of fresh meats, was begun in earnest in the United States district court today before Judge K. M. Landis.

A special venire of jurors appeared before Judge Landis from which twenty-three men were to be chosen to compose a grand jury to hear the evidence against the packers.

The firms which the government will proceed against are Swift & Co., Armour & Co., and Morris & Co., who it is alleged control the National Packing Co., for their common benefit. Early today deputy United States marshals were started out with more than a score of subpoenas and writs to bring before the grand jury employees and books of the concerns involved.

The government charges are as follows:

That directors of large packing houses are also directors of the National Packing Co., the alleged "trust company."

That, subsequent to directors' meetings of the National at which certain action would be taken exactly the same action, effective of the same date would be taken by the defendant concerns whose officers attended the National directorate meeting.

That while prices paid for raw meats were not materially raised the prices to retailers were advanced materially.

That the reports of the packing houses show their dividends and undivided profits to have increased materially and to have a direct ratio of increase with the increase in the price of meats.

That no change in the price or action affecting the market was taken by any packing house whose officers were interested in the National company until a directors' meeting of the National was held.

Chicago, Jan. 24.—The action of the federal grand jury in the investigation of the methods employed by the four big local meat packing companies was temporarily halted today. It was announced that some routine subjects will be disposed of first. It was explained that the changes had been made because the cases against the packers are of such grave importance it was deemed best that the members should familiarize themselves with grand jury procedure before considering the evidence.

FRANCE SUFFERS WITH FLOODS.

One-Fourth of Total Area of Kingdom Under Water.

Paris, Jan. 24.—The Paris flood situation in Paris reached a more critical stage this morning. The Seine registered 8.53 meteres at Pont Royal. This is the highest the river has been since 1802, when it reached 8.80 materes the highest point recorded in the history of France except in the year 1615.

The terrible tempest of rain and wind which broke over the city at daylight only adds to the horror of the situation and to the suffering of the poor homeless.

A fourth of France, it is estimated, is under water today. Snow and rain are adding to the floods which are unprecedented in the history of the present generation. The Seine continued to rise today, and the situation in his city grew worse hourly. The water has drowned out the electric plant in the chamber of deputies and today the deputies met by lamp light.

Premier Briand introduced a bill appropriating $400,000 for the relief of the sufferers from the floods. He described what the government was already doing to abate distress, and highly praised the heroic rescue work done by the soldiers and gendarmes.

Owing to the difficulty of getting food into the city, market prices have been raised, adding another element of distress to the poorer calsses.

Religious Factions Fight.

St. Petersburg, Jan. 24.—More than 100 persons have been killed and many wounded as the result of religious conflicts which for two days have been waging in Old Bokhera between the Sunnites and Shiahs. The Sunnites demand the replacement of the Shiah official by Sunnites. At the request of the Bokhara authorities Russian troops and machine guns have been sent from Samar and to the scene of the fighting.

Fortifications Bill Considered.

Washington, Jan. 24.—The fortifications appropriation bill was reported to the senate today. It carries $5,817,200, a net increase of $200,000 over the bill as passed by the house. The increase is for a total of $500,000 to be expended for that purpose. As reported the bill appropriates $2,332,911 less than is carried by law for the current fiscal year.

Another Victim's Body Found.

Montreal, Jan. 24.—At the Canadian Pacific railway headquarters today it was stated that the body of another passenger had been recovered at the Spanish river wreck, making the total known dead thirty-two.

Extend Shirt Waist Strike.

Philadelphia, Jan. 24.—Plans to extend the shirtwaist makers' strike to the towns in New Jersey were advocated today at a mass meeting of the strikers in this city. One of the strike leaders reported that two factories in Carmel, N. J., has already been closed down and that an active campaign would be waged in other towns in southern New Jersey. It is planned to pay the strike benefits from this city to the operators in those towns.

Manufacturers in this city say they now have almost all the help they require and are emphatic in their refusal to recognize any union.

McCumber Introduces Resolution.

Washington, Jan. 26.—Senator McCumber of North Dakota wants to know who is getting all the money under the existing high food schedules and in order to arrive at the truth of the situation today offered a resolution in the senate providing for a thorough investigation of the economic consideration involved.

Mexico Banks Suspends.

Mexico City, Jan. 26.—The United States Banking Co. suspended today, following its failure to make a clearing house settlement of yesterday's business.

THE DIVA'S RUBY

SYNOPSIS.

Baraka, a Tartar girl, became enamored of a golden bearded stranger who was prospecting and studying herbs in the vicinity of her home in central Asia, and revealed to him the location of a mine of rubies hoping that the stranger would love her in return for her disclosure. They were followed to the cave by the girl's relatives, who blocked up the entrance, and drew off the water supply, leaving the couple to die. Baraka's cousin Saad, her betrothed, attempted to climb down a cliff overlooking the mine, but the traveler shot him. The stranger was revived from a water gourd Saad carried, dug his way out of the tunnel, and departed, deserting the girl and carrying a bag of rubies. Baraka gathered all the gems she could carry, and started in pursuit. Margaret Donne (Margarita da Cordova), a famous prima donna, became engaged in London to Konstantin Logotheti, a wealthy Greek financier. Her intimate friend was Countess Leven, known as Lady Maud, whose husband had been killed by a bomb in St. Petersburg, and Lady Maud's most intimate friend was Rufus Van Torp, an American, who had become one of the richest men in the world. Van Torp was in love with Margaret, and rushed to London as soon as he heard of her betrothal. He offered Lady Maud [illegible] for her pet charity if she would aid him in winning Margaret from Logotheti. Baraka approached Logotheti at Versailles with rubies to sell. He presented a ruby to Margaret. Van Torp bought a yacht and sent it to Venice. He was visited by Baraka in male attire. She gave him a ruby after the American had told her of having seen in the United States a man answering the description of the one she loved. The American followed Margaret to the Bayreuth "Parsifal" festival. Margaret [illegible] to Van Torp, who presented her with the ruby Baraka had given him. Count Kralinsky, a Russian, arrived at Bayreuth. Van Torp believed him to be the one Baraka was pursuing. Baraka was arrested in London on the charge of stealing from Pinney, a jeweler, the ruby she had sold to Logotheti. Two strangers were the thieves.

CHAPTER VII—Continued.

But after he was gone, Spiro was heard calling loudly, though not rudely or violently, from his place of confinement.

"Mr. Policeman! Mr. Policeman! Please come speak!"

She Grasped Lady Maud's Arm.

The man on duty went to the door and asked what he wanted. In his broken English he explained very clearly that Baraka had a friend in London who was one of the great of the earth, and who would certainly prove her innocence, vouch for her character, and cause her to be set at large without delay, if he knew of her trouble.

"What is the gentleman's name?" inquired the policeman.

The name of Baraka's friend was Konstantin Logotheti, and Spiro knew the address of the lodgings he always kept in St. James' place.

"Very well," said the policeman. "I'll speak to the officer at once."

"I thank very much, sir," Spiro answered, and he made no more noise.

The sergeant looked surprised when the message was given to him.

"Queer case this," he observed. "Here's the thief appealing to the owner of the stolen property for help; and the owner is one of those millionaire financiers; and the thief is a lovely girl in man's clothes. By the by, Sampson, tell Mrs. Mowie to get out some women's slops and dress her decently, while I see if I can find Mr. Logotheti by telephone. They'll be likely to know something about him at the bank if he's not at home, and he may come to find out what's the matter. If Mrs. Foxwell should look in and want to see the girl, let her in, of course, without asking me. If she's in town, she'll be here before long, for I've telephoned to her house, as usual when there's a girl in trouble."

There was a sort of standing, unofficial order that in any case of a girl or a young woman being locked up, Mrs. Foxwell was to know of it, and she had a way of remembering a great many sergeants' names, and doing kind things for their wives at Christmas time, which further disposed them to help her in her work. But the London police are by nature the kindliest set of men who keep order anywhere in the world, and they will readily help a man or woman who tries to do good in a sensible, practical way; and if they are sometimes a little prejudiced in favor of their own perspicuity in getting up a case, let that policeman, of any other country, who is quite without fault, throw the first stone at their brave, good-natured heads.

Logotheti was not at his lodgings in St. James' place, and from each of two clubs to which the officer telephoned rather at random, the only answer was that he was a member but not in the house. The officer wrote a line to his rooms and sent it by a messenger, to be given to him as soon as he came in.

It was into in the hot afternoon when Mrs. Foxwell answered the message by coming to the police station herself. She was at once admitted to Baraka's cell and the door was closed after her.

The girl was lying on the pallet bed, dressed in a poor calico skirt and a loose white cotton jacket, which Mrs. Mowie had brought and had insisted that she must put on; and her men's clothes had been taken from her with all her other belongings. She sat up, forlorn, pale and lovely, as the kind visitor entered and stood beside her.

"Poor child!" exclaimed the lady, touched by her sad eyes. "What can I do to help you?"

Baraka shook her head, for she did not understand. Then she looked up into eyes almost as beautiful as her own, and pronounced a name, slowly and so distinctly that it was impossible not to hear each syllable.

"Konstantin Logotheti."

The lady started, as well she might; for she was no other than Lady Maud, who called herself by her own family name, "Mrs. Foxwell," in her work amongst the poor women of London.

Baraka saw the quick movement and understood that Logotheti was well known to her visitor. She grasped Lady Maud's arm with both her small hands, and looked up to her face with a beseeching look that could not be misunderstood. She wished Logotheti to be informed of her captivity, and was absolutely confident that he would help her out of her trouble. Lady Maud was less sure of that, however, and said so, but it was soon clear that Baraka did not speak a word of any language known to Lady Maud, who was no great linguist at best. Under these circumstances it looked as if there were nothing to be done for the poor girl, who made all sorts of signs of distress, when she saw that the English woman was about to leave her, in sheer despair of being of any use. Just then, however, the sergeant came to the door, and informed the visitor that the girl had an accomplice who spoke her language and knew some English, and that by stretching a point he would bring the man, if Mrs. Foxwell wished to talk with him.

The result was that in less than half an hour, Lady Maud heard from Spiro a most extraordinary tale, of which she did not believe a single word. To her plain English mind it all seemed perfectly mad at first, and on reflection she thought it an outrageous attempt to play upon her credulity; whereas she was thoroughly convinced that the girl had come to grief in some way through Logotheti and had followed him from Constantinople, probably supporting herself and her companion by stealing on the way. Lady Maud's husband had been a brute, but he knew the east tolerably well, having done some military duty in the Caucasus before he entered the diplomatic service; his stories had chiefly illustrated the profound duplicity of all Asiatics, and she had not seen any reason to disbelieve them.

When Spiro had nothing more to say, therefore, she rose from the only seat there was and shook her head with an air of utter incredulity, mingled with the sort of pitying contempt she felt for all lying in general. She could easily follow the case, by the help of the sergeant and the police court reports, and she might be able to help Baraka hereafter when the girl had served the sentence she would certainly get for such an important and cleverly managed theft. The poor girl implored and wept in vain; Lady Maud could do nothing, and would not stay to be told any more insane stories about ruby mines in Tartary. She called the sergeant, freed herself from Baraka's despairing hold on her hand and went out. And when she thought of what must have gone before, and of the part Logotheti had almost certainly played in the girl's life, her anger was roused, and she sat down and wrote to Margaret on the impulse of the moment. She gave a detailed account of her experience at the police station, including especially a description of the way Baraka had behaved in trying to send a message to Logotheti.

"I tell you quite frankly," Lady Maud wrote in conclusion, "that my friend Mr. Van Torp has begged me very urgently to use any friendly influence I may possess, to induce you to reconsider your engagement, because he hopes that you will accept him instead. You will not think any less well of him for that. A man may ask his best friend to help him to marry the girl he is in love with, I am sure! I told him that I would not do anything to make trouble between you and Logo. If I am making trouble now, by writing all this, it is therefore not to help Mr. Van Torp, but because the impression I have had about Logo has really frightened me, for you. I made such a wretched failure of my own married life that I have some right to warn a friend who seems to be on the point of doing just the same thing. You have a right to be sure that the man you marry is quite free, and that you won't suddenly meet a lovely eastern girl of 20 who claims him after you think he is yours; and your friend has a right to warn you, if she feels sure that he is mixed up in some affair that isn't over yet.

"I don't know where Logo is, but if he were near enough I should go to him and tell him what I think. Of course he is not in town now—nobody is, and I've only stayed on to clear everything out of my house, now that I'm giving it up. I suppose he is with you, though you said you did not want him at Beyreuth! Show him this letter if you like, for I'm quite ready to face him if he's angry at my interference. I would even join you in Paris, if you wanted me, for I have nothing to do and strange to say I have a little money! I've sold almost all my furniture, you know, so I'm not such a total pauper as usual. But in any case answer this, please, and tell me that I have done right, or wrong, just as you feel about it—and then we will go on being friends, or say good-by, whichever you decide."

Lady Maud signed this long letter and addressed it to Miss Margaret Donne, at Bayreuth, feeling sure that it would be delivered, even without the name of the hotel, which she did not know. But the Beyreuth post-office was overworked during the limited time of the performances, and it happened that the extra assistant through whose hands the letter passed for distribution either did not know that Miss Doane was the famous Cordova, or did not happen to remember the hotel at which she was stopping, or both, and it got pigeon-holed under D, to be called for. The consequence was that Margaret did not receive it until the morning after the performance of "Parsifal" to which she had taken Van Torp, though it had left London only six hours after him; for such things will happen even in extremely well-managed countries when people send letters insufficiently addressed.

Furthermore, it also happened that Logotheti was cooling himself on the deck of his yatch in the neighborhood of Penzance, while poor Baraka was half-stifled in the police station. For the yacht, which was a very comfortable one, though no longer new, and not very fast according to modern ideas, was at Cowes, waiting to be wanted, and when her owner parted from Van Torp after promising to dine on the next day but one, it occurred to him that the smell of the wood pavements was particularly nasty, that it would make no real difference whether he returned to Pinney's at once or in two days, or two weeks, since the ruby he had left must be cut before it was mounted, and that he might just as well take the fast train to Southampton and get to sea for 36 hours. This he did, after telegraphing his sailing-master to have steam as soon as possible; and as he had only just time to reach the Waterloo station he did not even take the trouble to stop at his lodgings. He needed no luggage, for he had everything he wanted on board, and his man was far too well used to his ways to be surprised at his absence.

The consequence of this was that when Baraka's case came up the next morning there was no one to say a word for her and Spiro. Mr. Pinney identified the ruby "to the best of his belief" as the one stolen from his counter, the fact that Baraka had been disguised in man's clothing was treated as additional evidence, and she and Spiro were sent to Brixton jail accordingly, Spiro protesting their innocence all the while in eloquent but disjointed English, until he was told to hold his tongue.

Further, Lady Maud read the police court report in an evening paper, cut it out and sent it to Margaret as a document confirming the letter she had posted on the previous evening; and owing to the same insufficiency in the address, the two missives were delivered together.

Lastly, Mr. Pinney took the big ruby back to his shop and looked it up in his safe with a satisfaction and a sense of profound relief such as he had rarely felt in a long and honorable life; and he would have been horrified and distressed beyond words if he could have even guessed that he had been the means of sending an innocent and helpless girl to prison.

One thing more which concerns this tale happened on that same day. Two well-dressed men drove up to the door of a quiet and very respectable hotel in the West end; and they asked for their bill, and packed their belongings, which were sufficient though not numerous; and when they had paid what they owed and given the usual tips, they told the porter to call two hansoms, and each had his things put on one of them; and they nodded to each other and parted; and one hansom drove to Euston and the other to Charing Cross; and whether they ever met again, I do not know; and it does not matter; but in order to clear Baraka's character at once and to avoid a useless and perfectly transparent mystery, it is as well to say directly that it was the young man who drove to Euston, on his way to Liverpool and New York, who had Logotheti's ruby sewn up in his waistcoat pocket; and that the ruby really belonged to Margaret, since Logotheti had already given it to her, before he had brought it to Mr. Pinney to be cut and set. But the knowledge of what is here imparted to the reader, who has already guessed this much of the truth, would not help Baraka out of Brixton jail, where the poor girl found herself in very bad company indeed; even worse, perhaps, than that in which Spiro was obliged to spend his time.

CHAPTER VIII.

Margaret received her friend's letter and the account of Baraka's trial by the same post on the morning after she and Mr. Van Torp had been to hear "Parsifal" together, and she opened the two envelopes before reading her other letters, though after assuring herself that there was nothing from Logotheti.

She read the newspaper cutting first, supposing that it contained something flattering about herself, for she had been a little short of public admiration for nearly a fortnight. Baraka's case was reported with the rather brutal simplicity which characterizes such accounts in the English papers, and Logotheti's name appeared in Mr. Pinney's evidence. There had been the usual "laughter," duly noted by the stenographer, when the poor girl's smart man's clothes were produced before the magistrate by the policeman who had arrested her. The magistrate had made a few stern remarks when ordering the delinquents to prison, and had called Baraka "hardened" because she did not burst into tears. That was all, and there were barely five-and-twenty lines of small print.

But the prima donna bit her handsome lip and her eyes sparkled with anger, as she put the cutting back into the first envelope, and took the folded letter out of the other. The girl had not only stolen a ruby, but it was Margaret's ruby, her very own, the one Logotheti had given her for her engagement, and which she had insisted upon having set as a ring, though it would cover more than half the space between her knuckle and the joint of her third finger. Further, it had been stolen by the very girl from whom Logotheti had pretended that he had bought it, a fact which cast the high light of absurdity on his unlikely story! It was natural enough that she should have seen it, and should have known that he was taking it to Pinney's, and that she should have been able to prepare a little screw of paper with a bit of glass inside, to substitute for it. The improbabilities of such an explanation did not occur to Margaret, who saw only the glaring fact that the handsome Tartar girl had accompanied Logotheti, between London and Paris, disguised as a man, and had ultimately robbed him, as he richly deserved. She had imposed upon Van Torp, too, and had probably tried to sell him the very stone she had stolen from Logotheti, and the one she had made him take as a gift was nothing but a bit of glass, as he said it might be, for all he knew.

She devoured Lady Maud's letter in a few moments, and then read it twice again, which took so long that Mrs. Rushmore sent Justine to tell Potts to ask if Miss Doane did not mean to go out that morning, though the weather was so fine.

Great singers generally develop a capacity for flying into rages, even if they have not been born with hot tempers. It is very bad for the voice, but it seems to be a part of the life. Margaret was very angry, and Potts became as meek and mild as a little lamb when she saw the storm signals in her mistress' face. She delivered her message in a pathetic and oppressed tone, like a child reciting the collect for the day at a Sunday school.

She Saw That She Was Quite White, and That Her Eyes Were Bloodshot.

The prima donna, imposing as a young lioness, walked slowly backwards and forwards between her window and the foot of the iron bedstead. There was an angry light in her eyes and instead of flushing, as her cheeks did for any ordinary fit of temper, they were as white as wax. Potts, who was a small woman, seemed to shrink and become visibly smaller as she stood waiting for an answer. Suddenly the lioness stood still and surveyed the poor little jackal that served her.

"Ask Mrs. Rushmore if she can wait half an hour," she said. "I'm very angry, Potts, and it's not your fault, so keep out of the way."

Margaret's wrath did not subside quickly, and as it could not spend itself on any immediate object, it made her feel as if she were in a raging fever. Her temples throbbed, her hands trembled and were as hot as fire, her lips were drawn and parched, and when she caught sight of herself in the looking-glass she saw that she was quite white and that her eyes were bloodshot.

But she was really a sensible English girl, although she was so very angry.

"This is ridiculous!" she said aloud, with emphasis. "I won't be so silly!" And she sat down to try and think quietly.

It was not so easy. A Tartar girl indeed! More probably a handsome Greek.

It was no wonder that they had succeeded in deceiving her for a while, the two orientals together! They had actually made Rufus Van Torp believe their story, which must have been a very different matter from lying to a credulous young woman who had let herself fall in love! But for her friend Lady Maud she would still be their victim. Her heart went out to the woman who had saved her from her fate, and with the thought came the impulse to send a message of gratitude; and the first fury of her anger subsided with the impulse to do so. By and by it would cool and harden to a lasting resentment that would not soften again.

Her hand still shook so that she could hardly hold the pen steady while she wrote the telegram.

"Unspeakably grateful. If can join me here will gladly wait for you. Must see you at once. Do come."

She felt better as she rose from the table, and when she looked at herself in the mirror she saw that her face had changed again and that her natural color was returning. She rang for Potts, remembering that the half-hour must be almost up.

"Potts," Margaret said, "I've been in a rage, but I'm only angry now. Do I look like a human being again?"

"Yes, ma'am," answered the maid, inspecting her gravely. "You are still a bit pale, ma'am, and your eye is a trifle wild, I may say. A motor veil, perhaps, if you are thinking of going out, ma'am."

"I haven't got such a thing, have I? I never motor now."

Potts smiled the smile of the very superior maid, and moved towards a perfectly new leather hat-box that stood in the corner.

"I always put in two for sea, ma'am," she said. "You wore one when we crossed the channel the last time, if you remember."

"Potts, you're a treasure!"

"Yes, ma'am," Potts answered vaguely in her meek voice, as she dived into one of the curious secret pockets of the hat-box. "That is, ma'am," she said, correcting herself, "I mean, it's very kind of you to say so."

WAR ON THE "400"

Mrs Taft Leader in Movement for a "1,000."

Death of Mrs. Astor Gives Opening for Enlarging the Smart Set—Rank Will Be a Valuable Asset.

Washington.—Under the name of the "Assembly Set" the smart set of New York, Philadelphia and Washington will be fused into a body not to exceed a thousand families. In this process there will be eliminated the now historic "Four Hundred."

Mrs. William H. Taft is behind this movement, which had its inception shortly after the death of Mrs. Astor a year ago, and which is looked upon favorably by the New Yorkers in view of the way that divorce and other causes have played havoc with the original membership.

There is absolutely no intention to ignore other cities except geographically. In the opinion of those behind the movement, every social leader of the country maintains a residence in either Philadelphia, Washington or New York, and this will be sufficient qualification for membership.

Membership under the new order of things will not be limited to a person, so far as numerical strength goes, but to one family. An attempt will be made whereby an outsider can be made eligible through marriage to one of the members, provided the union is of such character as to make this advisable.

There are as many men interested in this movement as there are women—men who are renowned throughout the country for what they do in politics and other fields—and this promises, according to the sponsors of the movement, a total elimination of the snobbish rich.

The first cause that brought about the consideration of this step is the hesitation of a New Yorker, for instance, to receive a member of Washington's or Boston's or Cincinnati's smart set as freely as he would one of the Four Hundred.

According to the articles of the new set, which will be informally ratified by the White House and the exclusive leaders of those cities, a person recognized by the assembly will be eligible to all the honors and courtesies, no matter what city he visits, provided there is a member of the assembly at such place.

Mrs. William H. Taft.

Rank, birth and wealth will be but relative qualifications for membership. Rank will be more valuable than birth, according to the promoters of the movement. They include birth as a categorical qualification in wealth to justify their coming under these headings.

Wealth alone will not be considered. That money, nevertheless, is not an unnecessary item, is made plain by the drain of expenses that membership in this set will demand.

Henry Clay's Sword.

The diplomatic sword worn by Henry Clay at the signing of the treaty of Ghent was presented to Miss Anna Gratz Clay, the commoner's great-granddaughter, of this city.

The sword was presented by Henry Clay to Gen. Bodley, a famous general in the war of 1812, who had always been his friend, and he in turn willed it to his son, Charles Bodley, and thus it came into the possession of Mr. Charles Bodley's daughter, Mrs. Florence Davenport of St. Paul, Minn.

Mrs. Davenport came to Lexington for a visit to her uncle, Col. William Pickett. She brought the sword with her, intending to present it to the Kentucky Historical society. After meeting Miss Clay and finding that she was Henry Clay's great-granddaughter and also a descendant of the Gratz family, who had always been great friends of the Bodleys, Mrs. Davenport prefered to present the sword to her, knowing how great a value she would place on such a gift. The sword is a graceful short sword, the kind worn on all diplomatic occasions.—Lexington Correspondence Louisville Courier-Journal.

No Violence Necessary.

"I submitted some humorous sketches here the other day," said Jokeley. "They haven't appeared yet. Did you kill them?"

"Oh, he hasn't changed at all, but he doesn't seem to realize it."

"How do you mean?"

Eloquence of Press Agent

He Ransacks History for Comparisons to Do Justice to Place He Is Booming.

The eloquent press agent has thus described a new restaurant:

"Millionaires dreaming of the sybaritic luxury of Babylonian days and of the wonder-workings of Haroun al Raschid through the might of a staggering outlay of money, are rapidly transforming a famous old place.

"And was there ever a place of such Neronic allurements designed to meet the languorous requirements of my lady of fashion! Would she smoke? That will be provided for. A luxurious smoking room for her is now building, let alone a manicurist, French hair-dressers, and maids imported from Paris. She may be reperfumed, repowdered, and redressed. Furthermore, she may enjoy a Turkish bath, be gowned by maids as expert as her own at home, and with her coiffure rearranged may take her jewels from the safe and after a Lucullan repast be ready for the opera.

"Solomon in all his glory, or Sardanapalus the magnificent, but feebly realized the splendors, etc., etc. . . . Here, in truth, is a veritable palace of the senses. The tone throughout is Assyrian and modeled after the palace of Sennacherib. A splendid staircase 65 feet high, of yellow and black marbles, imported direct from the site of Babylon, and costing $50,000, marked on either side by a series of small crouching bronze Assyrian lions, is one of the features of this splendid building."

Not Quite.

"He's a pretty 'fly' sort of fellow, isn't he?"

"He's trying to be, since he bought an airship."

Had to Get Running Start

Commercial travelers find most of the natural curiosities along the lines of travel. This is a story told by one after a trip through southern Canada. "Being impatient to get out of a sleepy little town, I ascertained the time of the outgoing train and hurried down to the station. After a while an object slowly emerged from the distance and slunk up alongside. I boarded the solitary coach, and after a tedious wait the engine began to gasp feebly, the old coach creaked a little, but the train did not move. I was about to get out to see what was the matter, when the forward door of the coach was suddenly flung open and a head popped in. 'Hey, you,' said the engineer, leering at me, 'climb off till I git a start, will y'?'"

A kick in time may also save nine.

"Minnesota, Know Thyself," is the slogan suggested by F. W. Murphy, of Wheaton, Minn., for the conservation congress which is to be held in St. Paul in March. Mr. Murphy says he does not believe there is a state in the Union where the people know so little about the resources and possibilities of their state as in Minnesota.

Senator Dar. S. Hall of Renville county is a broad gauge sort of a man any way you take him, says the Hutchinson Leader. Though senator he held the position of manager of the state fair, but when the state attorney general gave it as his opinion that he could not legally hold both positions, instead of testing the matter in the courts, Hall gracefully retired voluntarily from the board, saying that he always had been and always intended to be a law-abiding citizen and did not want to hold a position when there was the slightest question about his legal right to do so.

There is a hopeful side to the incident of the charges brought in congress against Secretary Ballinger, says an exchange. The secretary is charged with using public funds by increasing the salaries of of favorites in office, and so forth. The hopeful thing about it is that the public is shocked and frowns ominously. This is also what there is about it that is new. The things that Ballinger is accused of doing prevailed as a matter of course practically throughout the public service not so very long ago. Not more than ten years ago nobody would have thought it worth while to kick up a fuss about such things, and in case of a fuss being kicked up nobody would pay serious attention to it. The public conscience is keener than it used to be. The public's interest in its own business is keener than it used to be.

Wm. J. Bryan delivered an address in Havana the other day in which he said: "Resort to violence is always deplorable and will, I think, become less frequent as civilization advances. As man rises in intelligence and morals reason will more and more be substituted for force and violence in the settlement of difficulties. The day will come when the world will see the folly of doctrine that you can justly settle a difference of opinion by shooting a man who may differ with you. There is a growing acceptance of representative government and a fundamental doctrine of representative governments acquiescence in the will of the majority. That was the doctrine taught by Jefferson, the greatest exponent of representative government who ever lived, and it is necessary to the existence of all republics.

There is going to be a big county option meeting in St. Paul soon, and indications are that it will be attended by men who can stir things up politically if they desire, says the Little Falls Herald. J. F. Jacobson is expected to take an active part, and others of all shades of political complexion will be there. It is more than likely that other questions in addition to county option will be discussed, and a movement may be started which will be far-reaching. In some parts of the state the county option is acute, and made more so by the foolishness, as well as injustice, of the action of the house of representatives in shutting off debate on the question. There is no better way of vitalizing an issue than to subject it to legislative arrogance. The people are entitled to hear both sides of and all about every question, and then let the popular judgement rule thru the vote of the people. The Herald believes this to be the right doctrine, without reference to the merits or demerits of county option or any other proposition.

THE COUNTY PRINTING LAW

The jurisdiction and powers of the board of county commissioners in awarding the county printing seems to be so generally misunderstood that a judicial determination will be of universal interest. In quashing a writ of mandamus brought by the publisher of the Grand Rapids Independent against the board of county commissioners, of Itasca county, Judge Stanton gives an elucidation of the law that not only sets forth the duties of the board to accept any bid, irrespective of the fact that it is the lowest, when public interest would seem to so require.

In Itasca county it appears that bids were received from the Grand Rapids Independent and the Grand Rapids Herald-Review. The bid of the Herald-Review was higher than that of the Independent, but the former bid was accepted on the assumption that it offered a wider circulation of the official notices and that the best interests of the county would thus be subserved. The Independent took the matter into court, and in his memorandum denying relief to the aggrieved editor Judge Stanton sets forth these arguments:

"As to the publication of the annual financial statements, the largest item involved, the only statutory requirement is found in Chapter 205, Laws 1907, which requires the county board to cause said statement to be published for three successive weeks 'in some newspaper' in said county. No other direction to the board, or limitation, is given. It is therefore plain so far as this publication is concerned the board has a legal right to place it in any legal newspaper in the county which it may designate, and to pay therefor any price not in excess of the legal rate. Of course, it would be manifestly improper for the board to arbitrarily award the publications to the highest bidder, other considerations being equal, but the best interests of the county should be subserved, and the determination of this question must necessarily rest with the board in the exercise of its sound discretion. As to the delinquent tax list, so-called, and the proceedings of the board, though the statutory requirements are different, and provide, in each instance, that the contract for such publication shall be let to the lowest bidder therefore, except that 'the board may reject any offer, if in its judgement, the public interests so require, and may thereupon designate a paper without regard to any rejected offer.' We are thus confronted with the well settled rule of law that the action of the public officer which requires the exercise of judgement or discretion will not be controlled by mandamus. He can be compelled to act but the manner of his action cannot be controlled."

From a legal standpoint it would seem that Judge Stanton's memorandum is conclusive. The board's discretion is wide, and it would seem that as a general rule the motives that may have influenced the official conduct of members of county commissioners cannot be made the subject of judicial inquiry.

Unless the proof is clear that there has been a flagrant abuse of discretion the manner in which the board may decide county printing or other controversies cannot be impeached. It is assumed that the board will use its honest judgement in passing on the propositions presented.

If Judge Stanton's exposition of the laws of county printing contracts was generally read and understood there would be less complaint from the newspapers that "lose out" in their ambition to be "official county papers."

EXCHANGE EXCHOES.

Brainerd Dispatch:—A half dozen newspapers in Northern Minnesota have announced the advance in price from $1.00 to $1.50 per year with the past week. The advance in the cost of print paper, wages, material and in the cost of living has made it necessary to increase the subscription price of the weekly edition of papers in that class in order to make the subscription list self sustaining. The time is near at hand when the dollar weekly will be confined to the big cities and will consist of boiler plate news, instead of the home paper that gives you the local happenings and keeps your town before the public in order that the people in general will know it is on the map.

A St. Paul man sued the street railway company of that city for damages for killing his dog, and was given a verdict for damages in the district court. The railway company appealed and the supreme court reversed the decision.

WOULD DICTATE TO GOVERNOR EBERHART

St. Paul Politics.

Mayor Lawler has announced that he will not be a candidate for reelection. The pecuniary sacrifice is too great to permit of his serving another term. This at least can be said of his administration—that it has been scintillating and spectacular if a trifle uncertain. No one knew just when or where the mayor would break out next. The mayor exhibited every inclination to stir things up, and it says much for the administration of the public affairs in St. Paul, that apparently with all the will in the world there was so little with which he could find serious fault. Put all together the irregularities he discovered in the administration by the Democratic officials of the public affairs of this great city would scarcely have created a ripple if they had referred only to the municipal affairs of a country town. The fact is that there are few cities anywhere whose affairs are managed with a greater regard to economy and the public welfare than right here in St. Paul.

A Sensation That Frizzled.

The trouble at the school for the blind turned out not to have been much of a sensation after all. Every effort was made by interested parties to make a sensation out of a trifling juvenile insubordination, but when sifted to the bottom the complaints were those boys are always inclined to make of their teachers and of the food they get when they first get away from home and have to go out to board. The criticism made is that the prices paid for supplies are too low and that the wages paid domestics are not high enough to insure the best service. "On the whole," say the board of visitors who investigated the institution "the food is as good as is usual at such institutions. It has been eaten by the teachers and officers without complaint, but the cooking is not as good as it might be if better help were secured at better wages."

Reforms Suggested.

It is suggested, however, and this seems important, that the fire protection for the main building is not sufficient; that physical exercise which is especially needed for the blind is not provided for and that there is no teacher of physical culture. The principal blame appears to rest with the legislature which has not made sufficient appropriations for this institution. There doesn't seem to be any doubt that the management made the best use possibly of the funds at their disposal.

Divided Authority.

Another trouble is the divided authority. "The division of authority between the board of control and the board of directors makes fixed responsibility impossible," say the board of visitors. "One board furnishes the money and the other board spends it. There should be but a single board in charge of the institution." This is probably where the whole trouble lies. The so-called board of directors appointed to appease local prejudice against the state board of control should be done away with. There is no reason why the school for the blind should not be better managed by a principal directly responsible to the board of control.

S.S.S. CURES RHEUMATISM

Rheumatism is a specific blood fermentation, a souring of the circulation from an excess of uric acid accumulating in the blood stream. This uratic impurity comes usually as a result of constipation, weak kidneys, indigestion and stomach disturbances. These systemic irregularities may not be of marked severity or of long-duration, but each has a direct effect on the eliminative members of the body, which prevents the proper removal of the waste products. This refuse remains in the stomach and bowels, and souring forms uric acid, which the blood quickly absorbs.

Rheumatism is usually manifested in the joints and muscles. It is here its sharpest twinges of pain are felt, and stiffening of ligaments and tendons first commence. The pain of Rheumatism is caused by the contact of the sensory nerves with the gritty, acrid formation which uric acid causes to accumulate in the corpuscles of the blood about the joints. The stiffening of muscles and joints is usually gradual. Constantly the blood deposits the uric acid into the joints, and slowly the natural fluids are dried up and destroyed. Then Rheumatism becomes chronic and serious. Rheumatism is sometimes inherited, for like all blood diseases it can be transmitted to offspring. This explains why some persons are afflicted with the disease, and suffer its pains, who have otherwise been perfectly healthy.

RHEUMATISM FORTY YEARS.

I suffered with lumbago for a long time, and speaking of it to a friend one day he told me to try S. S. S. I did so, and soon found it was helping me. I had rheumatism for more than forty years, having contracted it in the army, but S. S. S cured me sound and well, and have had no return of the trouble. I think S.S.S. has no equal for curing rheumatism.

THOS. PUTTS.
111 Main St., Johnston City., Pa.

S.S.S. cures Rheumatism and cures it permanently. It goes into the circulation, and removes the uric acid, purifies the blood, and in this way destroys the cause. S. S. S. changes the blood from a sour, acid-steeped stream to a rich, healthy fluid, which quiets the excited nerves, eases the throbbing muscles and painful joints, and filters out of the circulation the irritating matter which causes every painful symptom of the disease. When the blood has been purified and enriched by S.S.S., it nourishes the different members that have been weakened and starved because of imperfect blood. Farm School Letter

Stock Breeders Association.

Minneapolis.—Several of the subdivisions of the Stock Breeders' Association held sessions at the University Farm School during the first week in January. The sheep breeders were interested more in a dog law protecting sheep than anything else. G. W. Baird, of Edina Mills, the original sheep breeder in Minnesota, was insistent upon better legislation and gave his experience in working with the legislature during the last session for an act that would in a measure give compensation to sheep owners for damages done by dogs. He had employed counsel to draft a bill providing for a tax of a dollar a head on dogs, the greater portion of the tax to be placed in a fund for paying for damages done by them. The dog and sheep laws of several states had been examined by counsel and the best points in them all digested and written in a bill, which seems to embrace everything desired by sheep men. He was, however, unable to get the legislation, but the association is going to persist in the work and try for a bill at the next session. Mr. Baird had himself recently lost about $600 worth of sheep by dogs and was unable to recoup his losses from the dog owners because of their financial irresponsibility. The same condition prevails throughout the state. His statistics showed that there were about one-fourth as many dogs as sheep.

The cattle men also held a session in the live stock pavilion. Prof. Grout exhibited a few Holsteins and gave a lecture on cattle judging. He next introduced a few Guernseys, among which were two cows of special interest. One was the best and the other the poorest dairy cow on the farm. Mr. Grout's idea was to show the value of proper breeding. The better cow was mother of the poorer. The former has a record of 405 pounds of butter last year and an average for five years of 325 pounds per year. Her capabilities are much greater, for by crowding and preventing sucking herself, so that all her milk can be obtained, he is confident that her yearly make would be closer to five hundred pounds, if not over. The question naturally arises as to the cause of the difference between the mother and daughter in butter production. Mr. Grout explains this as the result of breeding. The mother does not necessarily reproduce her kind. The sire used, while having some good, strong points, failed to produce offspring of value and was sent to the block after thorough trial. The daughter is kept as an object lesson to show what proper and improper breeding will do, and to show the good and bad points by comparison in judging. In this case the scales and tester were used and the heifer's milk tested, the only way of definitely knowing whether a cow is valuable on the farm. It is only through the daughters that the value of the sire can be determined; so it is maintained that when a sire shows good results and paying qualities in his offspring that he should be kept in the community so long as it is possible to prevent inbreeding. Then he can be sent to another community and his service preserved until age renders him unfit for further use. This method is as true of any grade of stock as with dairy cows.

The horse breeders listened to Prof. Edmond's lecture on judging horses. He presented three or four Clydes of a generally fine appearing quality, but his analysis of their qualities showed many defects from a scientific point of judging, though all were of large value as draft animals. His lecture elicited considerable discussion and questioning. He was followed by Dr. Lipp, assistant veterinarian of the Farm School, who lectured on the transmissability of unsoundness or disease. He does not regard many of the diseases of horses as hereditary, but does believe that a tendency to unsoundness is hereditary. Ringbone, spavin, side bone, and kindred defects in a horse are not born with him, but a tendency to these diseases is hereditary in the colt, and renders him liable to them. The natural reasoning therefore is that in using sires, as well as dams, animals free from unsoundness should be selected in order that the progeny may have strong constitutions free from the taint of even suspicion of unsoundness.

The doctor also lectured on the navel disease in colts. As a preventive he suggested absolute cleanliness in the stall at time of foaling. He would have the stall thoroughly cleaned and disinfected, using lime and a little crude carbolic acid, taking care that all cracks and crevices are reached by the disinfecting material, when he would cover the floor with clean straw. He would have the mare carefully washed about the vulva as late as possible before foaling, so that the possibility of disease germs entering the navel through the cord will be reduced to the minimum. Then he would, as an additional precaution, bandage the colt's body with antiseptically clean swaths, an old sheet thoroughly sterilized by boiling and drying being best, using a pad of outside cotton—not the common cotton sold in the stores— saturated with a five per cent solution of pure carbolic acid—made by using one ounce of acid to 19 ounces of water, placed over the navel. Absolutely cleanliness is the preventive and cure. The bandage also prevents undue strain on the colt's abdomen.

Women's Institutes.

The Department of Farmers' Institutes has been trying the feature of Women's Institutes in the past with such good results as to make the management feel that such institutes should become a regular feature of the work. The experiment was first tried in Houston county, where a meeting on one afternoon of each week, for four consecutive weeks, was held with the ladies. The attendance at each meeting was a surprise in enthusiasm, interest and numbers, averaging something like two hundred a day, and as each weekly meeting was held the interest continued to grow.

The Department has planned a course of four lectures and will soon begin the campaign of 1910. The sessions will not be confined to the ladies on the farm alone, but every woman or girl, in city, town or country is welcome and urged to attend. It is the policy of this department to so arrange these meetings as to be of as little inconvenience to those desiring to attend as possible, so they can attend and not materially neglect other duties, which might be otherwise if daily sessions were held for several successive days. Experience has shown that one meeting each week is eminently practicable, and accordingly dates have been set as follows:

Grandmeadow, Monday afternoon, January 10, and for each of the three succeeding Mondays, January 17, 24, and 31.

Spring Valley, Tuesday, afternoon, January 11, 18, 25, and February 1.

Stewartville, Wednesday afternoon, January 12, 19, 26, and February 2.

Leroy, Thursday afternoon, January 13, 20, 27, and February 3.

Austin, Friday afternoon, January 14, 21, 28, and February 4.

The Woman's institutes will be conducted by Mrs. Margaret B. Baker, of Saint Anthony Park, whose long experience as a teacher and in the home magnificently equips her for the work so interesting and important to the housekeeper.

Governor Addresses Farm School.

Gov. Eberhart was over to address the Agricultural Club of the University Farm recently, and was greeted by nearly the entire school and college, whose registration reaches almost to the thousand mark; and including the Short Course for farmers, the total present registration is over 1,200. Gov. Eberhart spoke on the question of conservation of natural resources and told the pupils that the state needed them worse than they needed the state. He regards agriculture as the greatest interest in the state and thinks the state needs the intelligent farmers which the agricultural school and college are turning out—a class of men and women skilled in scientific soil cultivation and general farm husbandry. It is a wonder to the governor that so many men are willing to appeal to him for work for the state at $75 or $100 a month when the farm offers independence and substantial wealth for men who cultivate the soil with skill and applied intelligence.

Dean Olson's Farewell.

The last meeting of the faculty of the University Farm School at St. Anthony Park, with Dean Olson, was held a few days since, at which the dean paid a high compliment to the professors with whom he has been associated since coming to the school. Resolutions on the death of late Dean Liggett and Prof. Robertson, of Crookston were unanimously passed.

"Home Decoration" at Conservation Meeting.

Mrs. Margaret J. Blair, head of the Domestic Art Department of the School of Agriculture, at St Anthony Park, has received an invitation from Gov. Eberhart to deliver an address to the lady visitors at the first Conservation Congress in Minnesota, to be held on the 16th, 17th, 18th and 19th of March, on the subject of "Home Decoration."

Prof. Green Talks On Forestry.

Prof. Green, of the Horticultural and Forestry department of the Experiment Station, was over in Minneapolis a few days ago and delivered a talk at the Lowry Congregational Church to the Men's Club, on the subject of "Forestry in Minnesota." It should be gratifying to the people throughout the entire state to know that the interest in forestry is growing among the people of the cities where the needs of better agricultural conditions are as fully realized as among the agriculturists themselves

Mrs. Blair Talks To Women.

Mrs. Blair, head of the department of Domestic Art, at the University Farm, St. Anthony Park, was recently at Atwater and Howard Lake, where she lectured to short course classes in the schools. Her audiences embraced about 150 ladies, mostly from the farms near the towns mentioned. The number in attendance such weather as the first and second weeks of January gave us is evidence of the general interest among farm women in the home and home decoration.

New Books On Fruit Culture.

Prof. Green's new book on Popular Fruit Growing has just been issued from the press and received at the Agricultural School library. Those interested in horticulture will find the book a valuable asset in connection with their fruit growing, as it treats of soils, varieties of fruit, and everything a fruit grower needs in making his enterprise successful. The author is professor in horticulture and forestry at the University Farm School.

Prof. Washburn, entomologist at the State Experiment Station, will go on a leave of absence of two months, next week, to Europe, where he will visit France and Holland for the purpose of studying the conditions of the Gypsy moth and Brown Tail moth.

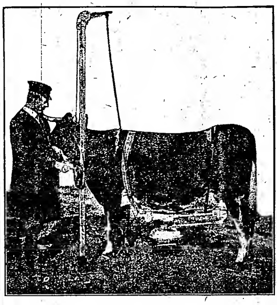
NEW MILKING MACHINE POPULAR IN SWEDEN

Simple Contrivance that Is Within Reach of Even Smallest Dairy Farmer and Easily Put Into Place.

(By Ernest Hoolist.)

While in Sweden some time since, I heard much of a new milking machine that was to be within the reach of even the smallest dairy farmer as regards cost and easy method of installment on any form. I had, however, to leave Sweden without being able to see the machine. During the past few weeks, my wife, being again in Sweden, was, through the courtesy of Mr. Frykberg, director of the manufactory where the milking machine was built, allowed to see it at work. The machine is very simply built; there is not the necessity to lay down plant to supply the motive power, as this is done entirely by hand, a great saving in primary installment; in fact this has been reduced to a minimum of expense. The milking machine proper is suspended by means of two broad straps, and just behind the shoulder over the loin of the cow. teats are milked simultaneously, or the valves can be shut off to allow of milking cows that have lost one or more quarters. It is particularly clean in its stripping action. The power required is about one-thirtieth horsepower, or a man can easily supply sufficient energy.

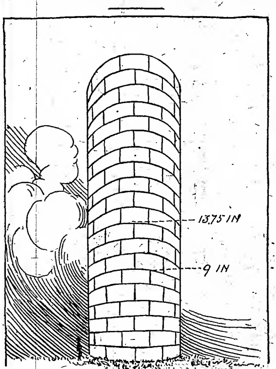
The milking machine is essentially a modern contrivance. Something of the kind seems to have been invented in America in about 1819, but no description of it is extant that we know of. About the middle of last century several machines were constructed to milk cows, but they do not appear to have met with much success, and were neglected and forgotten. Many dairy farmers, however, hankered after a mechanical device of this kind, and experimentation went on for many years. Most of those engaged in it had as their root idea a milk tube inserted into the teats of the cow, and a milker of this kind was placed on the market



The New Swedish Milking Machine.

There is the usual vacuum vessel for holding the milk. All this was very easy. Detachment-suction, or rather in this case, the result, is obtained by compression, the teat being inserted in a cup-like receptacle, one side of which actuated by a piston allows the teat to fill, and then presses it much after the method of the human fingers. All four in 1878. This milker consisted of a tube having openings along its sides, through which the milk entered. Each teat was fitted with a tube, and the tubes were kept together by a flexible band. There is no need for describing it in detail, because, although milk could be extracted by its means, it was not a really practical invention.

WATER NECESSARY FOR CROPS



This reservoir is 100 feet high and 37¼ feet in diameter and will hold 3,400 tons of water, an equivalent to 30 acre inches of rainfall. An average rainfall of 13¾ inches during the growing season would fill to the point indicated. A rainfall of nine inches, if completely utilized, would produce a yield of 30 bushels of wheat or 157 bushels of oats.

MUST GROW FENCE POSTS

Black Walnut and White Mulberry Trees Recommended as Excellent Varieties for Rapid Growth.

(BY THOMAS W. CISEL.)

Farmers of the central and eastern states are now seeing the need of replacing the timber lands that were so needlessly destroyed in order to secure more land for cultivation and as a method of securing money by cutting into lumber and other materials.

Now this same timber is wanted to replace farm buildings and in the building of fences.

Throughout the central west good fence posts can only be had from lumber dealers, who sell cypress and cedar posts at prices almost beyond the reach of the small farm owner.

Many farmers do not like concrete and steel posts, as they are expensive. Some farmers are turning fields out and farming without fences

But to do this much valuable pasture is lost, and crops are often damaged by trespassing stock.

Many are now planting timber for a future supply. In planting many plant the catalpa, thinking it the best.

True, it is a lasting timber and of quick growth when planted on low, rich soil, but on hilly land or dry sandy soil, it is very slow, requiring from ten to fifteen years to get posts large enough for fence building.

Others are planting osage orange, but it is also a slow growing tree and has the fault of growing crooked with short trunks and overmuch top.

The tree that gives the best results with little care after planting is the black locust. It does well on any soil, wet or dry. It is a quick grower and when planted thick—say six feet each way—the trees will grow tall with but little top, and will, at the end of five years, be ready for the first thinning out.

Don't breed from any diseased birds. Cut off their heads and burn them. Doctoring does not pay except with valuable birds.

The KITCHEN CABINET

As the rivers farthest flowing,
In the highest hills have birth;
As the banyan, broadest growing,
Oftenest bows its head to earth:
As the noblest minds press onward,
Channels far of good to trace;
So the largest hearts bend downward,
Circling all the human race.

Fish as Food.

Fish in one form or another is almost universally recognized as one of the important food materials that enters into the diet of most American families.

The mode of capture affects the market value. Fish caught by the gills and allowed to die in the water by slow degrees, as is the case where gill nets are used, undergo decomposition very readily, and are inferior as food.

Fish are often landed alive and allowed to die slowly. This custom is not only inhuman, but lessens the value of the fish. It has been found that fish that are killed immediately after catching, remain firm and bear shipment better than those allowed to die slowly.

Fish, because of their abundance, cheapness and wholesomeness are invaluable as an article of food. It is less nutritious and less stimulating than meat, as it contains less solids and more water.

The idea that fish is a brain food has been greatly exaggerated, because it is rich in phosphorus and the brain having that chemical in its composition which the fish is supposed to supply. The fact is that many meats have as large a proportion of phosphorus as fish. Being easily digested and therefore a good food for brain workers, may be one reason why the idea prevailed.

Scalloped Beef.

Chop fine the remnants of cooked beef; moisten with the liquor in which it was cooked, season with salt, pepper and butter if needed. Place in a deep dish and cover with seasoned mashed potatoes mixed with beaten egg. Bake a light brown and serve

Molasses Candy.

Take one quart of molasses, two cupfuls of sugar, one teaspoonful of vinegar, butter the size of an egg. Boil until it hardens in water. Just before removing it add a teaspoonful of soda. Pull when cool.

Breakfast Relish.

Put one dozen very thin slices of lean bacon into a hot frying pan; cook for one minute, then add six slices of tomatoes, or the canned may be used with the liquor reserved for soup or sauce.

We suffer not through any miraculous interposition of an avenging God, but in consequence of violated law, and the laws of nature make no distinction of persons; but so interwoven is human society, that the penalty is rarely confined to the transgressor."

Birthday Cake.

For a small child, little cakes decorated with frosting and red candles are always appreciated. There are so many inexpensive and pretty things to be bought now that one's ingenuity need not be taxed to make something pleasing. A cake baked in a small round loaf, frosted in white and the name written in chocolate with the date, or it may be done with colored sugar.

Get a candy pail cover, sandpaper, and stain it, then bore the holes part way through, making the hole to stand the candle in. This candle board may be used by every member of the family, being brought in in state with the cake in the center, and the lighted candles around it. More holes may be bored each year or they may all be arranged when the board is made to make the staining all look alike.

For a very young child the tiny cake might be surrounded by the little candles the size of a match, that are as popular with the little people. When there is a small party, or if one wishes to make a surprise cake, put little gifts that will not be hurt, by heating into the cake before baking. Even older children are made happy by such a cake.

Suet Pudding.

Mix and sift together two and three-fourths cups of flour, one teaspoonful of soda, one and one-half teaspoonfuls of salt, one teaspoonful of cinnamon, and half a teaspoonful each of ginger, cloves and nutmeg. One cup each of milk, molasses and suet. Combine mixtures. Three-fourths of a cup of currants, one and one-fourth cups of raisins, one-half cup of finely sliced citron added at the last. Steam three hours and serve with an egg sauce, made as follows: Two eggs, well beaten, one cup of sugar, one-fourth of a cup of hot milk, and one teaspoonful of vanilla. A yellow sauce may be made by using the yolks of the eggs. Flavor with orange rind and juice.

Commercial Value of Rat Skins.

The use of rat skins in the manufacture of fancy articles is increasing. Last year the trade in Great Britain alone amounted to $250,000, and supplies of brown rat skins are being sought in lots of from 100 to 10,000. It is proposed to start a business in Calcutta for securing and preparing the skins of the brown rat, to be used, among a variety of purposes, in the binding of books and the making of purses, gloves and various articles for women's use and wear.

A NEW TOWN EVERY WEEK

AND A NEW SCHOOL EVERY SCHOOL DAY.

The above caption about represents the growth of Central Canada. The statement was made not long since by a railroad man who claimed to have made the remarkable discovery that such was the case. There is not a district of a fair amount of settlement in any of the three Provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, but has its school, and the railways have stations every seven or eight miles apart, around which group the towns, some large and some small, but each important to its own district. Schools are largely maintained by public funds and the expense of tuition is but a nominal sum.

The final returns of the grain production for Central Canada for 1909 is now in, and the figures show that the value of the crops to the farmers of that country is about 195 million dollars, as compared with 120 million last year. American farmers or those who have gone from the United States, will participate largely in these splendid returns, and these comprise those who have gone from nearly every State in the Union.

One of the many proofs that might be put forward showing the immense wealth that comes to the farmers of Central Canada is seen in the sum that has been spent during the past two or three months by the farmers who have for the time being ceased worrying over the reaper and the thresher, and are taking to enjoying themselves for two or three months. It is said that fifty thousand people of these Western Provinces spent the holiday season visiting their old homes. Most of these passengers paid forty and some forty-five dollars for the round trip. Some went to Great Britain, some to the Continent, others to their old homes in Eastern Canada, and many thousands went to visit their friends in the States. The amount paid alone in transportation would be upward of two million dollars. Some make the trip every year. It need not be asked, "Can they afford it?" With crops yielding them a profit of $20 to $25 per acre, and some having as much as twelve hundred or more acres; the question is answered. The Canadian Government Agents at different points in the States report that they have interviewed a great many of those who are now visiting friends in the different states, and they all express themselves as well satisfied, and promise to take some of their friends back with them. There is still a lot of free homestead land in splendid districts, and other lands can be purchased at a reasonable price from railway and land companies.

Real Early Rising.

Farmer Brown and Farmer Jones were near neighbors, and many a dispute took place as to who was the earlier riser. Both maintained that each excelled the other.

One day Farmer Brown determined to put the subject to test. Rising very early one morning, about two o'clock he proceeded to visit his friend. Great was his astonishment when he saw Mrs. Jones banging out the clothes in the garden.

"Farmer Jones about?" he asked.

"Well," replied the lady, "he was the first part of the mornin', but I dunno where he be now."

A Real Catastrophe.

Philip, aged four, is in the habit of going across the street to a neighbor's house for milk. One day in December he returned home with an empty bucket and a grave face. "We can't get any more milk," he announced in a tone weighty with the importance of his message. "The cow's dried up." And, as we started in surprise at him, he suddenly clinched the matter with an observation, evidently of his own: "They don't think that she'll thaw out till spring."—Delineator.

Professional Conduct.

One of the best stories told about Mr. Birrell concerns a poor client, whose case he took up for nothing. When the case had been won, the client gratefully sent him the sum of 15s, which he accepted in order not to give offense. A colleague reproached him, however, for this "unprofessional conduct" in taking less than gold. "But I took all the poor beggar had," said Mr. Birrell, "and I consider that is not unprofessional."—M. A. P.

INSOMNIA

Leads to Madness, if not Remedied in Time.

"Experiments satisfied me, some 5 years ago," writes a Topeka woman, "that coffee was the direct cause of the insomnia from which I suffered terribly, as well as the extreme nervousness and acute dyspepsia which made life a most painful thing for me.

"I had been a coffee drinker since childhood, and did not like to think that the beverage was doing me all this harm. But it was, and the time came when I had to face the fact, and protect myself. I therefore gave up coffee abruptly and absolutely, and adopted Postum as my hot drink at meals.

"I began to note improvement in my condition very soon after I took on Postum. The change proceeded gradually, but surely, and it was a matter of only a few weeks before I found myself entirely relieved—the nervousness passed away, my digestive apparatus was restored to normal efficiency, and I began to sleep restfully and peacefully.

"These happy conditions have continued during all of the 5 years, and I am safe in saying that I owe them entirely to Postum, for when I began to drink it I ceased to use medicine."

Why does Great Britain buy its oatmeal of us?

Certainly it seems like carrying coals to Newcastle to speak of exporting oatmeal to Scotland and yet, every year the Quaker Oats Company sends hundreds of thousands of cases of Quaker Oats to Great Britain and Europe.

The reason is simple; while the English and Scotch have for centuries eaten oatmeal in quantities and with a regularity that has made them the most rugged physically, and active mentally of all people, the American has been eating oatmeal and trying all the time to improve the methods of manufacture so that he might get that desirable foreign trade.

How well he has succeeded would be seen at a glance at the export reports of Quaker Oats. This brand is recognized as without a rival in cleanliness and delicious flavor. 51

A. R. HILL FOR JOB

REGENTS WOULD LIKE TO HAVE HIM SUCCEED PRESIDENT NORTHROP.

NOW OF MISSOURI "U"

Most of Them Believe He Will Accept—Visit to Columbia Mo., to Be Paid by Committee on Successor.

Minneapolis. — Prof. Albert Ross Hill, president of the University of Missouri, has been offered the presidency of the University of Minnesota to succeed President Cyrus Northrop. The general opinion of those who are seeking him is that he will accept the offer.

For a time the regents expected to bring Dean Frederick S. Johns, formerly of the engineering college of the University of Minnesota, now of the college of arts and sciences at Yale, back to this state, but opposition caused the withdrawal of the name.

Although there are several educators on the list of the regents, the name of President Hill is declared to be almost their unanimous choice. It is expected that the selection will be made within the next few weeks, though the committee of the regents appointed to visit the various educators under consideration may take action in a week. Of this committee ex-Governor John Lind, is chairman, and the other members are B. F. Nelson, President Northrop, Pierce Butler, and Dr. William J. Mayo. Messrs. Lind and Nelson, and possibly Mr. Butler, were to go to various institutions of the country to discuss the topic of a new president, but they may go to no other place than Missouri.

President Hill is among the best educators of the country. He was born in Nova Scotia, Oct. 4, 1869, and received his first education in a country school. He went to Pictou, N. S., academy and to Dalhousie university, Halifax, where he received A.B. honors in 1892. Following this he went to Cornell, where he received his Ph. B., in 1895. He was at Heidelberg, Berlin and Strassberg in 1893-4 and at Clark university, Worcester, Mass., in the summer of 1896. He received his LL. D. at the University of South Carolina in 1905.

His first tutoring experience came in Nova Scotia from 1885 to 1887. He was professor of psychology at the state normal school at Oshkosh, Wis., in 1895 and 1897, and following this he was made associate professor of philosophy, in 1897, of the University of Nebraska.

From 1898 to 1903 he was professor of philosophy and director of the psychological laboratories of the same institution. In 1903 he went to the University of Missouri as professor of educational psychology and dean of the teachers' college. Since then he has advanced to the head of that institution. He is a member of Sigma Xi fraternity and numerous educational organizations.

BRINGS EUROPE'S FARMERS.

Bishop McGolrick Imports 100 Belgians Into Minnesota.

Duluth—One hundred Belgians will come to America in the coming spring to take up farms in Becker and Hubbard counties in a big Catholic colony to be established there by Bishop McGolrick of this city.

Most of them have means enough to equip a dairy farm or a truck garden plot. The Belgians are especially adapted to gardening work, while the Hollanders are the great dairymen of Europe.

In the meantime, representatives of the bishop are scouring all the large cities of the United States for prospective settlers. They are searching for men who have enough money to make a first payment on a small farm, buy the necessary tools and erect enough buildings to begin farming.

Bishop McGolrick says the European farmers, who, for the most part, are experienced, will be scattered to settlements among the American colonists in order that their methods of farming may serve as models for the emigrants from the great cities, who have little practical knowledge of land cultivation.

Everything points to a large migration of settlers to the lands of the bishop's company early in the spring, and before the summer is passed the promoters expect to see many clusters of prospering settlers' homes in Hubbard and Becker counties.

Stillwater—John Allen, a Minneapolis convict, died of tuberculosis. He was 22, and his father lives in Chicago. He was sentenced to the reformatory for burglary in the third degree and transferred to the prison for incorrigibility.

SWINGING HOOK KILLS MINER.

McKinley Ore Lander Instantly Dies at Kellogg Mine.

McKinley.—Gust Mattson, single, twenty-two years old, was instantly killed while acting as a lander on the ore stock pile at the Kellogg mine. Mattson's duty was to attend to the dumping of the ore on the stock pile when the cars were sent out. A hook became detached from the end of a cable and struck the man. Death was instantaneous.

JEALOUS YOUTH SHOOTS SELF.

Finding Girl He Called On Out He Courts Death.

Winona.—Wm. Meyer, aged twenty-five years, son of J. C. Meyer, local representative of the Minneapolis Brewing company, while in a jealous rage forced his way into the room of a waitress, armed with a loaded revolver. Not finding the girl there he turned the weapon upon himself. His body was found stretched across the bed with a bullet just over the heart.

STEWART TO LIVE 1,000 YEARS

Minneapolis Capitalist Not in Dying Humor.

Minneapolis—Elder Levi M. Stewart expects to live one thousand years more.

Paul C. Hirsch, also of Minneapolis will endeavor to "go him" for the same little period, if he likes certain properties just leased from Mr. Stewart so well that he shall wish to renew the leases when they expire—for said leases run an even thousand years, and contain a provision that the lessee may secure extensions by appearing personally in the presence of the lessor for the latter's signature.

In other words a little business meeting between Mr. Stewart and Mr. Hirsch may be looked forward to by the members of the Minneapolis longevity club, to take place on June 1, 2910.

The veteran real estate man has signed leases which expire Jan. 1, 2910, with Mr. Hirsch, whom he characterizes as the senior member of his firm, although the latter is fully 50 years younger.

Three Leases in All.

Three leases were signed, one being for 40 acres of land extending from St. Albon's bay, Lake Minnetonka, to Christmas lake, the annual rental during the first 20 years amounting to $300. Thereafter the rate will be increased 3½ per cent each score of years, based on the present valuation of the property. The property is valued at $500 per acre.

The other two leases comprise a lot on Tenth avenue south between First and Second streets, valued at $17,000, and the entire State addition, owned by Mr. Stewart and located on Lake street between Portland avenue and Third avenue south. These leases were made on the same basis and for the same period as that of the Minnetonka property.

The valuation of the State addition property on which the lease was based is $100,000. The rental will be increased on a graduated scale every 20 years during the life of the lease.

These leases are record-breakers in the United States so far as the number of years is concerned.

REDWOOD FALLS IS DRY.

For First Time in Thirty Years, There Is "Nothing Doing."

Redwood Falls.—For the first time in thirty years Redwood Falls is without a single licensed saloon. The power to grant or withhold license here is vested wholly in the city council.

For several years anti-license voters have succeeded in electing one alderman, and last year an attempt to elect a "dry" alderman in each ward came near being successful, the license candidates having only four majority in the First ward and six in the Second.

This year two of the license candidates and the mayor, heretofore sustaining license, agreed to be governed by a direct vote on the question of licensing saloons, stipulating that the anti-license vote should carry both words. At the election a clause was added to the ballot for a direct vote on the issue, and the result was a majority of twelve against license in the First ward and one in the Second.

"Wets" Try to Shape Ballot.

In the Second ward an attempt was made by the license supporters to go behind the returns on account of a ticket which had been passed upon as "dry" by the judges, but which, it was contended, should have been thrown out.

When the council met and was required to act on the applications for license, however, only one alderman, who was unpledged, voted yes.

Citizens generally have accepted the result without excitement, and many believe that the city will not again license saloons.

EXPRESS AGENT GRAFTED.

Minneapolis Man Used Unique "Kiting" Scheme.

Minneapolis.—A criminal charge of embezzlement in the sum of $914.22 has been made by the American Express company against Herman Hanscome, a former agent. The county attorney is charged with the prosecution of the case and the authorities are awaiting the return of Hanscome from a business trip to serve the warrant.

It develops that Hanscome, as one of the hundred city agents of the American Express company, issued money orders among his other duties as agent and the alleged appropriation of a number of the sums recited on such money orders constitutes the basis for the charge.

Investigation by the company shows that a short time after Hanscome's accounts were checked up, on October 27, a number of money orders for $50 were issued by Hanscome in favor of a number of names. The company alleges that these names were fictitious and that their agent cashed them himself at some of the principal dry goods houses of the city and placed the money to his account in his bank as against the day when he would again have to give the company a check for the funds he had supposedly taken in for money orders issued.

FAIL TO GET TIME EXTENSION.

Citizens of Minneota, Minn., Give Reasons For Not Erecting High School.

Marshall.—The residents of Minneota have failed to gain another extension of time in the matter of erecting a high school, which they were requested to do two years ago by George A. Aiton, state high-school inspector. The arguments advanced are that there is not enough attendance to warrant it and that the diplomas granted by it would not be as good as those from other schools.

MEET AFTER LONG SEPARATION.

St. Paul Man Reunited With His Brother After 47 Years.

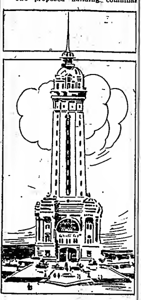
Bowling Green, Ohio, Jan. 16.—Separated while serving in the Union army during the Civil war, H. W. Sterling of Bowling Green and C. A. Sterling of St. Paul, Minn., met here for the first time in 47 years. Neither knew of the other's whereabouts until H. W. Sterling, recently, by chance learned that his brother was living in St. Paul.

URGE BIG PERRY MEMORIAL

Commissioners Want a Monument Erected at the Site Overlooking Scene of Victory.

Cleveland, O.—The one feature of the Perry's Victory Centennial, to be held at Put-in-Bay, O., in 1913, proposed by the commission in charge of the event, is a monumental memorial to the hero of the battle of Lake Erie. A design for such a memorial has been submitted by John Eisenman, and has been accepted by the commission as a basis on which to work.

In its report to Governor Harmon the commission says:



Design for Perry Monument.

"The proposed building combines the essentials of artistic beauty and historical significance with such practical objects as a lighthouse, a wireless telegraph station, a meteorological station, a life-saving station and other useful adjuncts.

"The drawing submitted contemplates a building three hundred and seventy-five feet in height, its cost subject to variation according to the material used. Each of the eight or ten floors of the tower may be dedicated to the use of one of the states participating in the centennial. Under the pinnacle the searchlight from the great height of more than 300 feet will be visible many miles at sea and cast its rays over a great land territory.

"Within a few years practically every vessel of any importance on the great lakes will be supplied with wireless apparatus, and this will undoubtedly be the case when a central station, commanding the whole lake region, is provided for the use of navigators. A wireless equipped vessel in distress on any of the great lakes could flash the call for help to Perry Memorial, and instantly response would be conveyed to the life-saving station, similarly equipped, nearest the threatened disaster, or by telegraph to any point from which succor might be forthcoming.

"It is believed that the general government would look with favor on a life-saving station, a lighthouse, a meteorological station and a permanent fisheries exhibit in connection with the proposed memorial."

TRUST'S FOE NOW ITS AID

James M. Beck Who Once Fought Sugar Combine Now Chief Counsel for the Company.

New York.—The retirement of Parsons, Closson & McIlvaine as counsel for the sugar trust was not unexpected but the selection of James M. Beck as counsel, as their successor came rather as a surprise.

Mr. Beck as assistant attorney general of the United States successfully prosecuted the celebrated Neely case. As first assistant attorney general he secured the verdict against the Northern Securities Company. He also took a prominent part in the first actions against the sugar trust, the paper trust, and other antitrust proceedings.

He was in the midst of these cases when he removed to New York and began the private practice of law.

Bonaparte's Resolve.

Napoleon entered the clubhouse with a frown a foot deep on his forehead, and a temper not fit for publication.

"Mille tonnerres!" he ejaculated. "If I ever play golf with Baron Munchausen again, may I end my days on the island of St. Helena."

"What's the matter with Munch, Boney?" asked Caesar, looking up from his asbestos copy of the congressional record.

"You get nothing but bad lies all over the links," retorted the emperor.—Lippincott's.

BREAKS A COLD IN A DAY

And Cures any Cough that is Curable. Noted Physician's Formula.

This is said to be the most effective remedy for coughs and colds known to science. "Two ounces Glycerine; half ounce Concentrated Pine; Put these into half a pint of good whiskey and use in doses of a teaspoonful to a tablespoonful every four hours. Shake bottle well each time." Any druggist has these ingredients in stock or will quickly get them from his wholesale house. The Concentrated Pine is a special pine product and comes only in half ounce vials each enclosed in an air tight case: But be sure it is labeled "Concentrated." This formula cured hundreds here last winter.

GOING UP!

"You haven't any work now?"

"No, I'm just waiting. I began by opening cab doors. Then I opened the doors of motor cars. Now I'm waiting till the aeroplanes are ready."

NO GOLFING THAT DAY, BUT—

Evidently Papa Had Not Neglected Other Pastime That Seems Somehow to Go with It.

It was customary for Perkins, on leaving his office at noon Saturday, to spend the afternoon joyously outdoors, engrossed with golf balls and highballs. Being a clever chap, he was a champion in both pastimes. On one Saturday, however, he was compelled to spend the whole day disposing of pressing business matters.

His wife and little daughter, as usual, were awaiting him on the porch. "No game to-day," he explained to Mrs. Perkins, as the little one rushed impulsively into his arms, and he picked her up and kissed her.

"No game to-day," he repeated.

Miss Margerie sniffed the air and said:

"Wel, papa, you do smell awfully of golf!"

EPIDEMIC OF ITCH IN WELSH VILLAGE

"In Dowlais, South Wales, about fifteen years ago, families were stricken wholesale by a disease known as the itch. Believe me, it is the most terrible disease of its kind that I know of, as it itches all through your body and makes your life an inferno. Sleep is out of the question and you feel as if a million mosquitoes were attacking you at the same time. I knew a dozen families that were so affected.

"The doctors did their best, but their remedies were of no avail whatever. Then the families tried a druggist who was noted far and wide for his remarkable cures. People came to him from all parts of the country for treatment, but his medicine made matters still worse, as a last resort they were advised by a friend to use the Cuticura Remedies. I am glad to tell you that after a few days' treatment with Cuticura Soap, Ointment and Resolvent, the effect was wonderful, and the result was a perfect cure in all cases.

"I may add that my three brothers, three sisters, myself and all our families have been users of the Cuticura Remedies for fifteen years. Thomas Hugh, 1650 West Huron St., Chicago, Ill., June 29, 1909."

The Ruling Passion.

An old Irish woman, in describing a "gone but not forgotten," said: "Mike was the foine man entoirely and he'd be living now, if it wasn't for the dhrink. He had a dog and sure that baste would bring him home from the saloon whin he was so blind wid liquor he couldn't see a step before him. And whin he died—'tis the truth I'm shpaking—his ghost walked at night, both back and foorth, betune the saloon and his house—and bedad 'twas so dhrunk his dog knew him!"

A Modest Doctor.

While on his vacation, a city doctor attended the Sunday morning service at a little country church. When the congregation was dismissed several of the members shook hands with him, and one, wishing to learn if he were a Methodist, inquired: "Are you a professor, brother?"

"Oh, no, indeed," answered the physician, modestly; "just an ordinary doctor."—Lippincott's.

WESTERN CANADA

Senator Dolliver, of Iowa, says:

"The stream of emigrants from the United States to Canada will continue."

Senator Dolliver recently paid a visit to Western Canada, and says: "There is a land hunger in the hearts of English speaking people; this will account for the removal of so many Iowa farmers to Canada. Our people are pleased with its Government and the excellent administration of law, and they are coming to you in tens of thousands, and they are still coming."

Iowa contributed largely to the 70,000 American farmers who made Canada their home during 1909. Field crop returns alone during year added to the wealth of the country upwards of

The musicale given by the pupils of Sister Cecilia at the Bijou theatre Monday evening was a delightful affair. The young people played with an accuracy that indicated that they are receiving careful and competent instruction. About two hundred of the friends of the young people were present and for them it was a delightful evening.

The local M. B. A. lodge, always socially enterprising, will give an "All Nations" dance on Monday evening Feb. 7. It will be a dance for members of the order and guests only, and those attending must wear clothing representative of some nation or country. Prizes will be given for the best representative costume. An interesting time is assured.

The meeting called for last Friday night at Carl O. Elg's residence to listen to County Superintendent H. F. Anderson speak on the graded school question, was well attended by the people living in the four districts, and while there was no action taken towards consolidating the four districts, Mr. Anderson's talk was the means of making the most of those present see the advantages of such a consolidation as soon as we get roads so that the children can be transported at less expense.—Erie Eleven Towns.

IT IS A GOOD RULING

Rural Mail Carriers are Not Required to Take Loose Coins From Mail Boxes

The post office department has just made a ruling that will interest patrons of rural routes. After Feb. 15, rural mail carriers will not be required to take loose coins from mail boxes and after that date packages deposited in mail boxes, with the money for payment of postage buried in the snow or hidden in some corner of the mail box, will not be delivered. The following communication was received from the fourth assistant postmaster general who is at the head of the division of rural delivery:

"In view of the extent to which practice of placing loose coins in boxes by rural patrons has grown, and the delay in the delivery and collection of mail and the hardship imposed on rural carriers incident thereto, you are informed that, commencing February 15, proximo, rural letter carriers will not be required to collect loose coins from rural mail boxes.

"Patrons should enclose coins in an envelope, wrap them securely in a piece of paper, or deposit them in coin-holding receptacle, so they can be easily and quickly taken from boxes, and carriers will be required to lift such coins, and, where accompanied by mail for dispatch, attach the requisite stamps."

The Royal Neighbors will give a box social and dance at Woodman hall this evening. A general invitation to attend the dance is extended.

You remember what a bright, sunshiny day yesterday was? There is no doubt that the groundhog saw his shadow and went scooting into his hole. And it is colder today, isn't it? You may not believe in signs, but you'll have to accept conditions as they are. Better buy an extra ton of coal and be prepared for six weeks more of winter.

County Surveyor C. H. Martz and D. Patterson of St. Hilaire were in town Monday and went from here to Mayfield to view some county ditch work. Mr. Martz being the engineer in charge of the work and Mr. Patterson one of the viewers appointed by the county board. At this time Mr. Martz has a crew of men in Star township on the preliminary survey of a big system of county ditches, the establishment of which people of the reservation township are petitioning for.

Optimistic.

Some time ago there was a flood in western Pennsylvania. An old fellow who had lost nearly everything he possessed was sitting on the roof of the house as it floated along, when a boat approached.

"Hello, John."

"Hello, Dave."

"Are your fowls all washed away, John?"

"Yes, but the ducks can swim," replied the old man.

"Apple trees gone?"

"Well, they said the crop would be a failure, anyhow."

"I see the flood's away above your window."

"That's all right, Dave. Them winders needed washin', anyhow."—Philadelphia Ledger.

The Editor's Sally.

City Editor—What do you mean by saying in this robbery story that "Brown was knocked down and relieved of a hundred dollars?" Were you ever robbed yourself?

New Reporter—No, sir.

City Editor—That accounts for it. If you'd been robbed you wouldn't describe the loss of a hundred dollars as a relief!

Merely Anticipated.

"I lost all my money during the recent panic."

"Yet you seem cheerful."

"Yes; Christmas would have trimmed me, anyhow."

A communication was presented to the county board by James Brady authorizing the board to cancel and annul the contract for the building of the court house; same was duly filed.

The following resolution was offered by Commissioner Demann who moved its adoption, which motion was seconded by Commissioner Pigeon:

Whereas, under the recent decision of the Supreme court it has become possible for the county to provide and expend a larger sum of money for the erection of a court house than was formerly held available, and we deem it necessary and advisable and for the best interests of the county that a better and more suitable court house be erected than was provided for in the contract heretofore let to James Brady, contractor, on or about Sept. 14th, 1909, and, whereas, the said James Brady has abandoned his said contract with the county providing for the erection of a court house, and has consented to the cancellation of the same, as appears from the files of the county auditor's office, and the instrument in writing signed by said Brady duly presented to this board: Therefore,

Be It Resolved, That the abandonment and cancellation and offer of cancellation of said contract to build a court house by said James Brady, be, and the same is hereby accepted; and be it further resolved, that the contract for building a county court house at Red Lake Falls made between the county of Red Lake and James Brady on or about Sept. 14th, 1909, be, and the same is hereby cancelled and annulled as to its whole uncompleted and unexecuted portion, and said James Brady and the sureties on his bond are discharged and relieved from further performance thereof.

Upon a vote being had, the following commissioners voted in favor of the adoption of said resolution: Demann, Pigeon and Lindquist and the following commissioners Johnson and Anbol not voting.

Whereupon the chairman declared the said resolution duly adopted.

Commissioner Demann offered the following resolution and moved its adoption, seconded by Commissioner Pigeon:

Resolved, that for the construction of a county court house of Red Lake county, we adopt the first set of plans and specifications heretofore filed in the office of the county auditor, purchased of Architect Fremont D. Orff, said plans and specifications to be used as a basis of bids for the letting of a contract to construct a court house.

Commissioners voting aye: Demann, Pigeon and Lindquist.

Commissioners voting nay: Johnson and Anbol.

Whereupon the chairman declared the resolution duly adopted.

Commissioner Demann offered the following resolution and moved its adoption, which motion was seconded by Commissioner Pigeon:

Whereas, the court house of the county of Red Lake was wholly destroyed by fire in April, 1909, and ever since said time, and at present the county does not own, possess or have a county court house of any nature or description and has no means of properly accommodating its officers, and we believe a court house to be a public necessity, therefore:

Be it resolved that this board take immediate steps to provide for the construction of a suitable court house to be paid for out of the proceeds of a sale of the court house bonds of the county in the amount of Thirty-seven thousand ($37000) dollars, and to that end, be it further resolved, that this board of county commissioners meet at the office of the county auditor in the Sortedahl building in the city of Red Lake Falls, Minnesota, on the 17th day of February A. D. 1910 at 10:00 o'clock A. M., there to receive sealed bids for the construction of a county court house at the county seat according to the first set of plans and specifications purchased by the county from Architect Orff and now on file in the office of the county auditor and to award the construction thereof pursuant to law, and, resolved further that due notice of the time and place and purpose of such meeting be given by the county auditor by publication for three weeks in the official paper of the county to-wit: the Gazette, and by posting for fifteen days in the city of Red Lake Falls.

Upon a vote being had thereon Commissioners Demann, Pigeon and Lindquist voted aye and Commissioners Johnson and Anbol voted nay.

Whereupon the chairman declared said resolution adopted.

Commissioner Demann offered the following resolution and moved its adoption, which motion was seconded by Commissioner Pigeon:

Whereas, the court house of the county of Red Lake was wholly destroyed by fire in April, 1909, and ever since said time and at present the said county does not own, possess or have a county court house of any nature or description whatever and has no means of properly accommodating its officers and we deem it to be a public necessity that this board provide for the construction of a courthouse;

And, whereas, we have ascertained and determined that a suitable court house cannot be constructed for a less sum than Thirty-seven thousand dollars,

And, Whereas the county has no funds available or on hand to pay for the construction of a court house, and no means of providing said funds except by issuing and negotiating the sale of the bonds of the county, therefore,

Be it Resolved, that the bonds of the county of Red Lake, in the state of Minnesota be issued and negotiated in the aggregate sum of Thirty-seven thousand dollars ($37000) for the purpose of building a county court house at the county seat of said county.

That said bonds be issued and of denominations as follows: thirty-seven bonds of one thousand dollars each, bearing interest at the rate of not to exceed five and one-half per cent per annum (rate of interest to be determined by the board from the bid accepted) principal and interest payable at the city of Red Lake Falls, Minnesota; principal payable twenty (20) years from date of issue, interest payable semi-annually, interest to be evidenced by interest coupons attached to the respective bonds;

That the said bonds be negotiated and sold as provided by law for not less than their par value and that the proceeds of the issuance and the sale of same shall be used for the purpose of building a county court house at the county seat in and for said county and for no other purpose. And the chairman of the board of county commissioners and the county auditor of the said county are hereby authorized, ordered and directed to prepare, sign, seal and execute and issue said bonds and interest coupons in the manner provided by law, on behalf of said county and to that end;

NEARLY HALF MILLION ON DEPOSIT

Local Banking Institutions are Making Great Showing of Business.

$475,000 on Deposit—Brooks Bank Makes Good Showing.

The quarterly statements of the First State Bank and the Merchants State Bank published in this issue of the Gazette contain some interesting information. The reports show that there is on deposit nearly a half million dollars in the banking institutions, the figures showing that actual deposits amount to more than $475,000. These figures indicate a very satisfactory condition of affairs in southern Red Lake county.

The First State Bank at the little village of Brooks also makes a fine showing in the statement published in this issue. There is on deposit in that bank over $60,000 and the report shows that the bank is doing a flourishing business.

THAT ST. HILAIRE SKIMMING STATION

Its Record is a Great One and Tells Story of Prosperity.

That's the Creamery Located "Seven Miles South of Thief River Falls."

The nerve of the Thief River reporter to the daily press is something to marvel at if not admire. He certainly does go the limit. His last story is one telling of the record of the Thief River Falls creamery for the year 1910. It is a good record and is worth talking about.

He purports to make his story one about the remarkable growth of dairying in Red Lake county. He says there are several good creameries in the county, which is true, and one "south of Thief River Falls some seven miles," that has made a good record also. Wouldn't that make you smile! Why not dignify that dinky skimming station with a name even if it isn't located at the north end metropolis? The St. Hilaire creamery happens to be the banner institution of the kind in Red Lake county.

During the past year the St. Hilaire creamery has paid to its patrons $75,000. That's about $25,000 more than any other creamery has paid, and there are some good creameries in Red Lake county, including the one located at Thief River Falls.

PROPOSED ADDITION TO COURSE OF STUDY

Agriculture and Manual Training May be Added to High School Course.

Large Number of High Schools of State Have Added the Course.

At the last meeting of the board of education the question of adding a course in agriculture and manual training to the work offered to the students in the Red Lake Falls high school was discussed informally and so favorably impressed were the members of the board with the information at hand regarding such work in the public schools that it was decided to investigate the work being done in nearby schools where such courses are offered.

The schools at McIntosh, Ada, Warren and Crookston offer the work and the course is to be added at Thief River Falls next year. Dr. N. M. Watson and Dr. I. Lemieux of the board of education and Supt. L. V. Koos will visit some of these schools soon to make a study of the work being done.

Of the 206 high schools in the state 116 now offer courses in agriculture and manual training and the results have been so practical that people become enthusiastic over the work wherever it is being done. One of the practical results is that there is a much larger attendance of boys in the schools that have added the work. Many of the schools that are now offering the courses are much smaller than the Red Lake Falls school.

State Inspector Aiton, who is a practical school man and who does not believe in the public schools taking up impractical schemes, is a firm believer in the value of the course in agriculture and manual training. He believes that the public schools should offer to the young people of the state an opportunity to do this practical work. The value of the work lies not so much in the information acquired as in the interest aroused and the mental training received.

The Red Lake Falls people will certainly desire to keep up the standard of their schools and the Gazette believes that public sentiment will favor the establishment of a course in agriculture and manual training if the committee visiting the other schools find that practical work is being done. The expense of adding the course would not be great. It would be necessary to add one more teacher and to purchase some equipment for the work.

This is a question in which every one should be interested and there should a free discussion. The columns of the Gazette are open to any citizen who may wish to give expression to his opinions.

Mathews-Fournier.

Miss Obeline Mathews, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Mathews, and Theodore Fournier, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Fournier were married Monday morning. The wedding occurred at St. Joseph's church at 10 o'clock, Rev. Fr. Bosse officiating. It was a quiet wedding, only a few relatives being present. Following the ceremony a wedding dinner was served at the Fournier home after which there was a reception at the home of the bride's parents.

Mr. Fournier operates the cheese factory at Wylie and he and his bride have gone to housekeeping at Wylie. Many friends are glad of the opportunity to offer congratulations and best wishes.

PREPARING FOR THE TOURNEMENT

Firemen of Northwestern Minnesota to Meet at Bemidji.

Tournament Will be Held Last of June or Early in July.

Judge S. A. Swanson was the Red Lake Falls representative at the meeting of the executive committee of the Northwestern Firemen's Tournament association held at Crookston to make arrangements for the tournament to be held at Bemidji the last of June or early in July.

The committee decided to purchase another association banner to be contested for by the teams in the hook and ladder race. This banner, like the one offered in the hose race, will be the property of the association and will be held by the winners until the next contest only, unless that team wins that event at three successive tournaments.

The use of corked shoes by athletes in the teams is to be prohibited. This action was taken, it is said, to make the contests less dangerous. This change does not apply to men running behind the carts or to men in individual contests.

The athletes of the local fire department have not decided whether or not they will participate in the events at Bemidji next summer.

"INSURGENTS" ARE TO BE DISCIPLINED

Federal and State Administrations are Working in Harmony.

"Insurgents" Must be Good and Sing the Harmony Song.

[Special Correspondence to Red Lake Falls Gazette.]

St. Paul, February 2—The governor's visit to Washington and his conference with President Taft resulted at least in their arriving at an understanding. The governor was no doubt sincere in reporting to the president the substance of popular insurgency and the gradual reconcilation of the people of the state to the tariff law enacted at the special session of congress. Nor is there room for doubt that that is to be the attitude of what may be designated as official Republicanism. One notices the trend among those Republicans who regard themselves as leaders and as a part of the structure of the Republican organization. Indeed in those sections where pains have already been taken to make the organization effective, as is some parts of the First District where the representative in congress recognizes that he has a fight on his hands, it has been given out cold that where honors are to be distributed they will only be awarded to those who are working in harmony with the organization. Others who persist in their insurgency will be disciplined.

Putting on the Screws.

That hereafter is to be the attitude at the state capitol where the word has gone out that it is part of the policy of the state administration that the local must work in harmony with the national administration. There may indeed be no effort outspokenly and above board to make the insurgents out of the Republican party. The program is to ignore them. Right along now the governor is likely to have minor places to fill. To secure one of them the aspirant must subscribe to the Taft policies. He must be reconciled to the Payne-Aldrich Tariff law, the Aldrich-Cannon leadership, and standpatter at least to the extent of recognizing in a tariff commission a compromise measure for which both wings of the Republican party may stand and work together to establish party harmony and party solidarity. If he persists that the tariff commission is no solution of the tariff at all—that its establishment is not a compliance with the pledges of the Republican platform—that the way to revise the tariff is to revise it downward; that a progressive Republican can expect no progress as long as congress is controlled by Aldrich and Cannon and the interests they represent—if in other words he is still unreconciled—he will be given quite plainly to understand that such an attitude cannot be officially countenanced and that those who assume it cannot hope to have weight in the party councils or share in the rewards due faithful service.

An Example of Discipline.

An apt illustration is given of what it means when the state and federal administrations are in concert is given in certain appointments that have been made in the Sixth Congressional district. That district is represented by Congressman Lindberg. He is an original insurgent; also he is persistent; also he is unreconstructed and unreconciled, having the notion that it is rather the duty of a congressman to represent his constituents than to take orders from party leaders. Congressman Lindberg's rival in the district is Ex-congressman Buckman whom he defeated. When a vacancy occured in the office of executive agent for the game and fish commission names of men in the Sixth District began to be mentioned. Among them was that of "Tug" Wilson of Royalton. He is known as a close friend of Congressman Lindberg. The organization people got wind of what was going on—among them Senator Alderman of the adjoining county of Crow Wing. Now Senator Alderman is in close touch with Senator Smith. He is, by the same token, a member of that influential organization known as the senate combine. He served in the senate during the time Eberhart was lieutenant governor and was known to be close to him. He presented the matter to the governor in the right way. Result: the appointment instead of being given to "Tug" Wilson, Lindberg's friend, was presented to H. A. Rider a Buckman partizan and an organization Republican.

The Federal Machine Co-operates.

That, however, was only half the game, the state's half. It was now up to the federal machine to get in its work; for the appointment of Rider the game and fish comissioner left vacant the office of deputy United States Marshall which he occupied. Mr. Lindberg was taught the lesson that it paid to be good and didn't pay to be bad when the vacant federal position in selecting an occupant for which he would be expected naturally to have some say, was handed over to his arch enemy Ex Congressman Buckman himself. Recalcitrant and unreconciled insurgents will do well to take notice and govern themselves accordingly.

Dragging the University into Politics.

Extraordinary pressure has been brought to bear during the past week on Governor Eberhart to induce him to discipline B. F. Nelson for the part he took in defeating the Republican machine candidate for president of the State Fair Association by displacing him on the board of regents of the State University. Really the open way in which he has been fought first by the state capitol officials and later by organization Republicans has made it impossible for Governor Eberhart not to appoint him without laying himself open to the charge of making a political football of the greatest of state educational institutions. However it may be authoritatively stated that Governor Eberhart has made up his mind in this matter not to yield to political pressure and that Mr. Nelson's reappointment is assured.

Other Vacancies.

There will be on March 1st other vacancies on the board of regents, one occasioned by the death of S. M. Owen and others by the expiration of the terms of C. A. Smith of Minneapolis and Pierce Butler of St. Paul. Mr. Smith will undoubtedly be reappointed. He is a Republican and a friend of the governor's friends. Webster Wheelock, the son of the late Joseph Wheelock, editor of the Pioneer Press is being pushed for Butler's place, and may get it, although powerful influences are being brought to bear in Mr. Butler's behalf. Who will succeed

BIG BOOSTER'S MEETING AT BEMIDJI

Notable Meeting Called for Next Thursday.—Work for Re-apportionment.

An Organization to Improve Conditions in Northern Minnesota.

A meeting of men of affairs in northern Minnesota is called to be held at Bemidji next Thursday, Feb. 17, and it is expected that the meeting will result in an organized effort to secure many things of which northern Minnesota is in need and no doubt nearly every county in northern Minnesota will be represented at the meeting.

The Duluth Evening Herald has the following to say editorially of the movement:

"Big things can be made to result from the proposed conference of northern Minnesota interests at Bemidji, Feb. 17 and 18. Whether the meeting effects a compact and resolute and aggressive organization for the common good of the communities of the northern two-thirds of the state, or results in a painful fiasco, depends upon the interest taken in it by the various communities, upon the character of the men they select to represent them, and upon the earnestness with which these men go about their work.

"When the meeting was announced, the Herald stated, without talking with any member of the Duluth Commercial club, that that body would be found alert and ready to do its share.' That statement has been borne out by the action of the club. Now if the other commercial clubs of northern Minnesota will take action equally effective, and if the county commissioners and legislative members will use their authority to appoint delegates and to pick men who will go and speak out in meeting, the Bemidji conference can make itself historic.

"Nor should it be forgotten at that meeting that the chief thing to be considered, and the first thing because without it nothing else will come, is reapportionment. Northern Minnesota must send to the next legislature a solid delegation of senators and representatives who will work for reapportionment first, last and all the time, and who will lay down the ultimatum that until a reapportionment bill has been passed no other measure shall become law. In that way, and in that way only, lies northern Minnesota's salvation."

CAN'T GET BODIES

FROM CHERRY MINE—BLOCKADED RUNWAY HINDERS WORK OF RESCUERS.

MANY CORPSES FOUND

Smoldering Fire Continues Behind Mine Wall Back of Which Lie Bodies of the 100 Victims as They Fell.

Cherry Ill., Feb. 3.—After three days of incessant labor, only 400 feet of the many miles of underground passages of the St. Paul mine are open, and it is problematical as to when the 167 bodies can be brought to the surface. Every effort is being made to clear the runway from the main shaft to the air pit. This object may be accomplished by tonight, and then a search for the bodies can be made, and the corpses discovered yesterday can be removed.

An inspection of the cleared portion of the second level today showed that from the bottom of the main shaft, 350 feet westward for 250 feet, the principal road is in good shape.

Some of the heavy timbers near the shaft are charred, but are solid. The chief passage to the east is walled up. Behind this wall is a smoldering fire. Back of the fire lie about 100 dead miners, as they fell on Nov. 13, when the flames started.

TAFT WANTS VERTREES.

Tennessee Attorney Asked to Defend Landoffice.

Washington, Feb. 3.—John J. Mr. Vertrees probably will also confer with the president as the friendship between the two men is one of long standing.

Vertrees has not signified his acceptance of the offer to act as counsel either for Land Commissioner Dennett or H. H. Schwartz, chief of the field service, both of whom are accused with Secretary Ballinger by Louis R. Glavis. A strong effort will be made to have him take up the case.

The legal representatives of the interior department in the congressional investigation will consist of a chief counsel and two associates. One of the assistants will be a western man, while the others reside in Washington. In addition to the three lawyers designated as counsel, Mr. Ballinger will be assisted in an advisory capacity by Albert Battle of Seattle, his former law partner who is now in this city.

COMMISSIONER OF LAND OFFICE TAKES NELSON'S ADVICE.

Secretary of the Interior Maintains He Has Nothing to Conceal and Will Not Engage Lawyer

Washington, Feb. 2—Acting upon the suggestion of Senator Nelson, chairman of the Ballinger-Pinchot congressional investigation committee, that "the other side" should be represented by an attorney who would take upon himself the task of cross-examining the witnesses, it was announced today that at the future hearings of the committee, either H. H. Schwartz, chief of the field service or Fred Dennett, commissioner of the landoffice, would be represented by counsel.

At the close of the investigating committee's session Monday afternoon Senator Nelson said that the cross-examination of Louis R. Glavis had proceeded "feebly" because of the lack of counsel.

As a matter of fact the cross-examination consisted largely of questions asked by the democratic members of the committee, and designed to accentuate the political phases of the testimony Glavis had previously given.

Secretary Ballinger still declined to engage counsel in his own behalf, saying he had nothing to conceal.

Senator Nelson, it is said, again expressed the attitude of the committee as favoring the presence of counsel both for the purpose of cross-examination and for the presentation of the case for the other side.

ON PACKERS' TRAIL.

New York Grand Jury to Investigate Cold Storage.

New York Feb. 2.—The New Jersey side of the Hudson river was today the center of activity in an attempt to find out why food prices are high. The investigating body was the Hudson county grand jury which continued its probing into the cold storage business of the big packing companies and other concerns which maintain extensive warehouses in Jersey county.

The jury examined numerous witnesses in an effort to learn what quantities of food stuffs are stored in the various plants and whether there is any understanding among the firms to hold the necessaries of life to regulate the supply and get the biggest prices possible.

Cold storage seems to be the subject upon which the investigation of the high cost of living and is being trusted by the probers in the metropolitan territory generally.

Meat prices are again on the upward trend. A third of a cent is the average advance in the wholesale rates. One full cent added to the present prices is predicted before the week end.

BLAST KILLS THIRTY-FIVE.

Thirty-three Bodies Recovered From Kentucky Mine.

Drakesboro, Ky., Feb. 2.—Heroic as have been the efforts of the rescuers, it was believed today that it would be many hours before the Browder mine near this city would yield up the bodies of the last of the long list of men whose lives were snuffed out in an explosion yesterday.

Early today thirty-three bodies had been recovered.

Of the 100 men in the mine when the disaster took place, it is now practically certain that more than a third perished.

Except for the twenty-five miners who were working near the shaft in the ill-fated east entry and who, many of them mangled and some fatally hurt, were brought to the surface within a few minutes after the concussion, the relief workers have not found a sign of life.

Drakesboro, Ky., Feb. 2.—A telephone message from the Browder mine at 8 this morning places the number of dead in yesterday's explosion at thirty-five. The bodies of thirty-three have been recovered. Several men were injured.

Railroads Reject Demands.

New York, Feb. 2.—Sixty railroads in the country have notified the representatives of 32,000 firemen of the rejection of the demands for a 20 to 25 per cent wage increase and other concessions.

News of the rejection was contained in a private dispatch from Chicago today. The railroads express a willingness to arbitrate the questions in dispute, but flatly refuse their demands.

McArthur is here and will enter at once upon the taking of an inventory of the institution. Hellstrom goes to The Fargo News as business manager of that institution.

The actual change in the management of the institution will probably not take place for some days yet.

In Favor of Fish Stations.

Washington, Feb. 1.—The senate committee on fisheries today reported favorably the McCumber bill appropriating $25,000 for a fish culture station in North Dakota. The bill originally designated Fargo as the site for the station, but this feature was eliminated and the selection of the site was left to the discretion of the department of agriculture.

IS IT GUNNESS?

BROTHER'S HOUSEKEEPER

Indiana Authorities Send An Officer to Willmar to Attempt to Identify Suspect as Famous Murderess.

Willmar.—That Mrs. Belle Gunness of the La Porte, Ind., murder farm fame, is actually alive and within a few miles of this city, is the allegation of Samuel Kirby of Mankato. Furthermore, Mr. Kirby believes that the woman is now housekeeping in the family of his brother, Gus Kirby, a prosperous farmer.

Samuel Kirby arrived in this (Kandiyohi) county last Thursday evening, intent upon securing the arrest of the woman, who is known by the name of Mrs. Vellie Casey.

The county officers do not put much credence in the rumor.

Several reputable persons who have seen the suspected woman are loath to admit that she bore any resemblance to Mrs. Gunness.

Samuel Kirby, senior, of Mankato, is the only one who believes that the housekeeper and the unaccounted for murderess are the same. It is at Samuel Kirby's instigation that Samuel Bail, a representative of the police department of La Porte, Ind., arrived here with a warrant for the arrest of Mrs. Gunness.

The detective is supplied with a detailed description of Mrs. Gunness and made the first official comparison of the physical characteristics of the two women. The La Porte authorities did not agree to run down the Willmar rumor until Samuel Kirby had guaranteed the expense of their transportation.

Gustavus Kirby sold the Kandiyohi county farm last week to Samuel Gerver of Willmar for $10,000. Mrs. Casey, the housekeeper was present during the negotiations. It is said that both she and her employer expressed their intention of going to California as soon as all of the property was disposed of. Sheriff Peter Bonde of this county is not of the opinion that Mrs. Casey is the much-wanted woman.

In Willmar Samuel Kirby at times refers to himself as a detective and is prone to discuss the inability of the police to catch criminals. He refers to statistics and say that only two murderers out of every 100 are ever caught and that the country is spending billions of dollars uselessly for protection it does not receive.

Son Opposes Father's View.

Mankato.—Samuel Kirby, Jr., the son of Samuel R. Kirby, the man who claims that Mrs. Belle Gunness, the alleged La Porte murderess is employed as a domestic on his brother's farm near Willmar, is inclined to believe that his father is on the wrong track and that the woman at Willmar is not the much-sought Mrs. Gunness.

According to young Kirby his uncle in Willmar engaged the housekeeper, who is now in the limelight, at a St. Paul employment agency.

About two months ago, mutual friends of the two brothers wrote to the brother residing at Mankato, and insisted that he proceed at once to his brother's home.

Thinking the situation serious he at once left for his brother's farm and remonstrated with him for keeping the woman as a housekeeper. After remaining at the farm for two days, during which time the brothers continually wrangled, they parted in an angry mood, the one remaining on his farm and the other returning to Mankato.

Samuel R. Kirby, the father accidentally noticed the picture of Mrs. Gunness recently in an old newspaper and was immediately impressed by what he thought a great likeness between the La Porte woman and his son's housekeeper.

As a consequence of this decision on his part he notified the police officials, who have now taken charge of the investigation.

EBERHART AFTER PRIZE FIGHT

He Tells Dakota County Sheriff to Keep Them Down.

Governor Eberhart will not permit prize fighting in the state of Minnesota. Following his return from Washington he has taken up the story of a reported prize fight in Dakota county, which is supposed to have occurred in south St. Paul on the evening of Jan. 23, and has written a stinging letter to Frank McDevitt, Sheriff of the county, at Hastings. The governor said:

"Your duty is plain in the premises, and there can be no excuse for an officer permitting a violation of the laws against these offenders."

FARIBAULT GIRL LOST.

Strangely Disappears From Spokane Where She Had Been Employed.

Faribault.—Word was received here that Miss Eva Feeley, born and raised in this city, had disappeared from her apartments, 418 Cedar street, Spokane, Wash. She has been employed for years in a Spokane department store.

She exhibited a telegram she claimed to have received from her sister, Mrs. Leon Dulac, of Faribault, saying that her sister intended to visit her. At night she failed to come home and the efforts of the Spokane police to find her have failed.

Mrs. Leon Dulac, the sister mentioned in the dispatch, died suddenly. The cause of her death is unknown.

Inquiry at the Dulac home revealed that so far as the surviving family knew Mrs. Dulac had sent no telegram to Spokane this week, nor had she intended to visit her sister, from whom no letter has been received since Christmas. The relatives here are mystified over the girl's disappearance, but suggested that she may be visiting her sister, Miss Alice Feeley, a school teacher at West Branch, Idaho.

PLAN BIG CORN SHOW.

Stillwater has a Silver Cup Trophy For Exhibitors.

Stillwater. — An annual seed corn exhibit under the direction of a permanent organization is being arranged for as the result of a meeting at the Booster club. Such an exhibit last winter proved a stimulant to corn growing. John Q. Macintosh, clerk of the district court; B. A. Imholt, a prominent farmer of St. Croix, Wis., who is now manager of the Stillwater equity market feed mill and elevator; and George Jarchow, a progressive Washington county farmer, were named as a committee to perfect organization and arrange for the first exhibition.

The organization will be for competition by farmers of Washington county, Minnesota, and St. Croix county, Wisconsin. They have accepted a $70 silver cup as a trophy.

The trophy will be offered for competition to exhibitors of at least five specimens, with the condition that the person securing it five seasons shall become its owner.

The first exhibition will be in Auditorium hall about the middle of February. Experts from the state agricultural college and others will deliver addresses.

PLUNDER IN HAY STACKS.

Confession of Illinois Prisoners Clears Holland Mystery.

Holland.—Sheriff W. H. Lake and his deputy, F. V. Denhart, found in haystacks, two miles south of Rushton, rifles and revolvers stolen from the hardware store of H. D. Siehring, Holland, Sept. 14.

The cache of weapons was found upon information furnished by Sheriff Fauskee, of Colfax, Ill., from a confession of two men held in that town. The two men also confessed to robbing stores at Ashton, Ia., and Reading, Minn. Most of this plunder has been located. Following their confession, the two men sawed the bars of the Colfax jail and are yet at large.

Sheriff Lake and Deputy Denhart began a search of haystacks throughout the territory about Holland, and finally located the plunder where the robbers said they had put it, breast high in the haystack.

He said upon the crop being sent east it would mean $260,000 to be distributed in this locality.

St. Paul Rate Hearing Ends.

St. Paul.—The railroad rate hearing, which has been going on at St. Paul during the last year before C. E. Otis, master in chancery, has came to an end as far as the Great Northern is concerned. A short hearing will be held later, on the Minneapolis and St. Louis railway. Comptroller Drew, of the Great Northern, was cross-examined by E. S. Durment, attorney for the state. On April 4, attorneys on both sides will submit printed briefs to Master Otis. An appeal will be taken.

EIGHTEEN YEARS AGO HE HAD LESS THAN 3 DOLLARS

HE IS NOW ONE OF THE RICHEST FARMERS IN SASKATCHEWAN, CENTRAL CANADA.

Arriving in Canada in 1891, just eighteen years ago, E. A. Guillomin could speak but his native language. He is a Frenchman. He had but a little over two dollars in his pocket, thus being short over seven dollars of the ten dollars required to secure entry for a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres. He eventually borrowed the money and near Forget, Saskatchewan, he started life in Canada on the homestead in which to-day he is the fortunate possessor of fifty quarter sections of land, or 8,000 acres.

Now Mr. Guillomin did not acquire all these acres as a result altogether of his farming operations, which were extensive. He looked with satisfaction upon what he was doing on his limited area, he was saving, careful, and had foresight. Surrounding land could be had for about $3.00 per acre, and he continued buying as his savings would permit, until now he has fifty quarter sections, some of which he can sell at $25.00 per acre.

Threshed Fifty Thousand Bushels.

This year he was engaged in threshing on his place for 54½ days. He threshed out 50,000 bushels of wheat, of which he sold 34,000 bushels, one train load, at a price varying from 84 to 87 cents per bushel. He has on hand still 15,000 bushels. In addition to wheat he raised 30,000 bushels of oats, 7,000 bushels of barley and 500 bushels of flax. He owns 104 horses and a number of cattle, but since the construction of the railway he has been engaged chiefly in raising wheat. This year he bought his first threshing machine, paying for it the sum of $2,100. He estimates that the machine earned for him this fall $3,000, thus paying for itself in one season and leaving $900 to the good. The weather was very propitious for farm threshing, not a single day being lost in the two months which were spent in this work. The wheat averaged 23 bushels to the acre and graded No. 1 and No. 2 Northern. In the past nine years seven good crops have been harvested on this farm. For six successive years the returns were excellent, that is in the years 1901, 1902, 1903, 1904, 1905 and 1906. In the two following years there was a partial failure. As the years have passed the quality of the buildings on the farm have been steadily improved, and are now as good as can be found in the district. About $10,000 has been invested in this way by Mr. Guillomin. The farm consists of 6,880 acres, of which about 6,000 acres were under crop this season.

SCRATCHED SO SHE COULD NOT SLEEP

"I write to tell you how thankful I am for the wonderful Cuticura Remedies. My little niece had eczema for five years and when her mother died I took care of the child. It was all over her face and body, also on her head. She scratched so that she could not sleep nights. I used Cuticura Soap to wash her with and then applied Cuticura Ointment. I did not use quite half the Cuticura Soap and Ointment, together with Cuticura Resolvent, when you could see a change and they cured her nicely. Now she is eleven years old and has never been bothered with eczema since. My friends think it is just great the way the baby was cured by Cuticura. I send you a picture taken when she was about 18 months old.

"She was taken with the eczema when two years old. She was covered with big sores and her mother had all the best doctors and tried all kinds of salves and medicines without effect until we used Cuticura Remedies. Mrs. H. Kiernan, 663 Quincy St., Brooklyn, N. Y., Sept. 27, 1909."

Without further consulting Margaret, who had seated herself before the dressing-table, Potts proceeded to fasten a broad-brimmed black straw hat on the thick brown hair; she then spread an immense white veil over it, drew it under her mistress' chin and knotted it in a way that would have amazed a seaman.

When Margaret was putting on her gloves Mrs. Rushmore herself came to the door, knocked and opened discreetly before there was any answer.

"My dear child," she asked, "what in the world is the matter? Nothing serious, I trust?"

"Oh—nothing," Margaret answered, going forward to meet her, and finding her natural voice. "I'm sorry if I've kept you waiting."

"It doesn't surprise you, my dear," Mrs. Rushmore said, with emphasis; "and Potts looked quite grave when she brought me your message half an hour ago."

"You would have been more surprised if she had burst out laughing," Margaret said viciously.

"My dear," Mrs. Rushmore answered, "I'm astonished at you! I know something has happened. I know it. You are not yourself this morning!"

This was a statement so evidently absurd that it could not be answered except by a flat contradiction; so Margaret said nothing, and went on working her hand into a perfectly new glove.

"I see that you have not even opened your letters," Mrs. Rushmore continued severely. "Except that," she added, noticing the loose sheets of Lady Maud's letter on the toilet-table.

Margaret gathered them up hastily, folded them into a crumpled package and thrust them into the empty envelope. For once, she had forgotten her caution, but she retrieved herself by pushing the thick letter into her long glove, much to Potts' distress, for it made an ugly lump. She made it worse by forcing in the second envelope which contained the newspaper cutting.

"I'm ready now," she said.

Mrs. Rushmore turned and led the way with stately steps; she was always imposing, but when she was offended she was monumental. The two went out in silence, and walked slowly down the straight, dull street side by side. Mrs. Rushmore spoke first, after they had gone some distance.

"I know," she said, "that something has happened. It was in that letter. You cannot deny it, Margaret. It was in the letter you folded in that hurried manner."

"The news was," answered the prima donna still viciously.

"I told you so. My dear child, it's not of the slightest use to try to deceive me. I've known you since you were a child."

"I'm not trying to deceive you."

"When I asked what had happened, you answered, 'Nothing.' I do not call that very frank, do you?"

"Potts was there, to begin," explained Margaret crossly.

But Mrs. Rushmore no longer heard. Her head was up, her parasol lay back upon her shoulder, her faded eyes were brighter than before, and the beginning of a social smile wreathed her hitherto grave lips.

"There's Mr. Van Torp, my dear," she said in quite another tone, and very low, "and unless I'm much mistaken—yes, I knew it! He's with Count Kralinsky. I saw the count from the window yesterday when he arrived. I hope our friend will present him."

"I dare say," Margaret answered indifferently, but surveying the two men through the white mist of her thick veil.

"Yes," said Mrs. Rushmore with delight, and almost whispering in her excitement. "He has seen us, and now he's telling the count who we are."

Margaret was used to her excellent old friend's ways on such occasions, and gave no more heed to them than she would have given to a kitten scampering after a ball of string. The kitten would certainly catch the ball in the end, and Mrs. Rushmore would as surely capture the lion.

Mr. Van Torp raised his hat when he was within four or five paces of the ladies, and his companion, who was a head and shoulders taller than he, slackened his pace and stopped a little way behind him as Mrs. Rushmore shook hands and Margaret nodded pleasantly.

"May I present Count Kralinsky?" asked the American. "I've met him before, and we've just renewed our acquaintance."

Mr. Van Torp looked from Mrs. Rushmore to Margaret, and tried to see her expression through her veil. She answered his look by a very slight inclination of the head.

"We shall be delighted," said the elder lady, speaking for both.

She Watched Him Intently While He Read the Printed Report.

Mr. Van Torp introduced the count to Mrs. Rushmore and then to Margaret, calling her "Miss Donne," and she saw that the man was handsome as well as tall and strong. He had a magnificent golden beard, a clear complexion, and rather uncertain blue eyes, in one of which he wore a single eyeglass without a string. He was quietly dressed and wore no jewelry, excepting one ring, in which blazed a large "tallow-topped" ruby. He had the unmistakable air of a man of the world, and was perfectly at his ease. When he raised his straw hat he disclosed a very white forehead, and short, thick fair hair. There was no sign of approaching middle age in his face or figure, but Margaret felt, or guessed, that he was older than he looked.

In her stiffly correct French, Mrs. Rushmore said that she was enchanted to make his acquaintance, and Margaret murmured sweetly but unintelligibly.

"The count speaks English perfectly," observed Mr. Van Torp.

He ranged himself beside Margaret, leaving the foreigner to Mrs. Rushmore, much to her gratification.

"We were going to walk," she said. "Will you join us?" And she moved on.

"It is a great pleasure to meet you," Kralinsky said by way of opening the conversation. "I have often heard of you from friends in Paris. Your little dinners at Versailles are famous all over Europe. I am sure we have many mutual friends, though you may never have heard my name."

Mrs. Rushmore was visibly pleased, and as the way was not very wide, Margaret and Van Torp dropped behind. They soon heard the other two enumerating their acquaintances. Kralinsky was surprised at the number of Mrs. Rushmore's friends, but the count seemed to know everybody, from all the grand dukes and archdukes in Russia, Germany, and Austria, to the author of the latest successful play in Paris, and the man of science who had discovered how to cure gout by radium. Kralinsky had done the cure, seen the play, and dined with the royalties within the last few weeks. Mrs. Rushmore thought him one of the most charming men she had ever met.

In the rear Mr. Van Torp and the prima donna were not talking; but he looked at her, she looked at him, they both looked at Kralinsky's back, and then they once more looked at each other and nodded; which meant that Van Torp had recognized the man he had met selling rubies in New York, and that Margaret understood this.

"I'll tell you something else that's quite funny, if you don't mind dropping a little further behind," he said.

Margaret walked still more slowly till a dozen paces separated them from the other two.

"What is it?" she asked in a low tone.

"I believe he's my old friend from whom I learned to whistle 'Parsifal,'" answered the American. "I'm pretty sure of it, in spite of a good many years and a beard—two things that change a man. See his walk? See how he turns his toes in? Most cowboys walk like that."

"How very odd that you should meet again!" Margaret was surprised, but not deeply interested by this new development.

"Well," said Van Torp thoughtfully, "if I'd known I was going to meet him somewhere, I'd have said this was as likely a place as any to find him in, now that I know what it was he whistled. But I admit that the other matter has more in it. I wonder what would happen if I asked him about Miss Barrack?"

"Nothing," Margaret answered confidently. "Nothing would happen. He has never heard of her."

Van Torp's sharp eyes tried in vain to penetrate the veil.

"That's not quite clear," he observed. "Or else this isn't my good day."

"The girl fooled you," said Margaret in a low voice. "Did she mention his name to you?"

"Well no—"

"She never saw him in her life, or if she ever did, it was she who robbed him of rubies; and it was not the other way, as you supposed. Men are generally inclined to believe what a nice-looking girl tells them!"

"That's true," Van Torp admitted. "But all the same, I don't quite understand you. There's a meaning in your voice that's not in the words. Excuse me if I'm not quick enough this morning, please. I'm doing my best."

"Your friend Baraka has been arrested and sent to prison in London for stealing a very valuable ruby from the counter in Pinney's," Margaret explained. "The stone had just been taken there by Mons. Logotheti to be cut. The girl must have followed him without his knowing it, and watched her chance, though how old Pinney can have left such a thing lying on the counter where any one could take it is simply incomprehensible. That's what you heard in my voice when I said that men are credulous."

Mr. Van Torp thought he had heard even more in her accent when she had pronounced Logotheti's name. Besides, she generally called him "Logo," as all his friends did. The American said nothing for a moment, but he glanced repeatedly at the white veil, through which he saw her handsome features without their expression.

"Well," he said at last, almost to himself, for he hardly expected her to understand the language of his surprise, "that beats the band!"

"It really is rather odd, you know," responded Margaret, who understood perfectly. "If you think I've adorned the truth I'll give you the police court report. I have it in my glove. Lady Maud sent it to me with a letter." She added, after an instant's hesitation, "I'm not sure that I shall not give you that to read, too, for there's something about you in it, and she is your best friend, isn't she?"

"Out and out. I dare say you'd smile if I told you that I asked her to help me to get you to change your mind."

"No," Margaret answered, turning slowly to look at him. "She tells me so in this letter."

"Does she really?" Van Torp had guessed as much, and had wished to undermine the surprise he supposed that Margaret had in store for him. "That's just like her straightforward way of doing things. She told me frankly that she wouldn't lift a finger to influence you. However, it can't be helped, I suppose."

The conclusion of the speech seemed to be out of the logical sequence.

"She has done more than lift a finger now," Margaret said.

"Has she offended you?" Van Torp ventured to ask, for he did not understand the constant subtone of anger he heard in her voice. "I know she would not mean to do that."

"No. You don't understand. I've telegraphed to ask her to join us here."

Van Torp was really surprised now, and his face showed it.

"I wish we were somewhere alone," Margaret continued. "I mean, out of the way of Mrs. Rushmore. She knows nothing about all this, but she saw me cramming the letters into my glove, and I cannot possibly let her see me giving them to you."

"I Took a Sort of Interest in That Tartar Girl."

"Oh, well, let me think," said the millionaire. "I guess I want to buy some photographs of Bayreuth and the 'Parsifal' characters in that shop, there on the right. Suppose you wait outside the door, so that Mrs. Rushmore can see you if she turns around. She'll understand that I'm inside. If you drop your parasol towards her you can get the letters out, can't you? Then as I come out you can just pass them to me behind the parasol, and we'll go on. How's that? It won't take one second, anyhow. You can make believe your glove's uncomfortable, and you're fitting it, if anybody you know comes out of the shop. Will that do? Here we are. Shall I go in?"

"Yes. Don't be long! I'll cough when I'm ready."

The operation succeeded, and the more easily as Mrs. Rushmore went quietly on without turning her head, being absorbed and charmed by Kralinsky's conversation.

"You may as well read the newspaper cutting now," Margaret said when they had begun to walk again. "That cannot attract attention, even if she does look round, and it explains a good many things. It's in the thinner envelope, of course."

Van Torp fumbled in the pocket of his jacket, and brought out the slip of newspaper without the envelope, a precaution which Margaret noticed and approved.

She watched him intently while he read the printed report, but his face did not change in the least. At that short distance she could see every shade of his expression through the white veiling, though he could not see hers at all. He finished reading, folded the slip carefully, and put it into his pocket-book instead of returning it to the envelope.

"It does look queer," he said slowly. "Now let me ask you one thing, but don't answer me unless you like. It's not mere inquisitiveness on my part." As Margaret said nothing, though he waited a moment for her answer, he went on. "That ruby, now—I suppose it's to be cut for you, isn't it?"

"Yes. He gave it to me in Versailles, and I kept it some days. Then he asked me to let him have it to take to London when I came here."

"Just so. Thank you. One more question, if I may. That stone I gave you, I swear I don't know that it's not glass—anyhow, that stone, does it look at all like the one that was stolen?"

"Oh, no! It's quite another shape and size. Why do you ask? I don't quite see."

"What I mean is, if these people are around selling rubies, there may be two very much alike, that's all."

"Well, if there were? What of it?"

"Suppose—I'm only supposing, mind, that the girl really had another stone about her a good deal like the one that was stolen, and that somebody else was the thief. Queer things like that have happened before."

"Yes. But old Pinney is one of the first experts in the world, and he swore to the ruby."

"That's so," said Van Torp thoughtfully. "I forgot that."

"And if she had the other stone, she had stolen it from Mons. Logotheti, I have not the least doubt."

"I daresay," replied the millionaire. "I'm not her attorney. I'm not trying to defend her. I was only thinking."

"She was at his house in Paris," Margaret said, quite unable to keep her own counsel now. "It was when I was at Versailles."

"You don't say so! Are you sure of that?"

"He admitted it when I was talking to him through the telephone, and I heard her speaking to him in a language I did not understand."

"Did you really? Well, well!" Mr. Van Torp was beginning to be puzzled again. "Nice voice, hasn't she?"

"Yes. He tried to make me think he wasn't sure whether the creature was a boy or a girl."

"Maybe he wasn't sure himself," suggested the American, but the tone in which she had spoken the word "creature" had not escaped him.

He was really trying to put the case in a fair light, and was not at all maneuvering to ascertain her state of mind. That was clear enough now. How far she might go he could not tell, but what she had just said, coupled with the way in which she spoke of the man to whom she was engaged as "Mons. Logotheti," made it quite evident that she was profoundly incensed against him, and Van Torp became more than ever anxious not to do anything underhand.

"Look here," he said, "I'm going to tell you something. I took a sort of interest in that Tartar girl the only time I saw her. I don't know why. I dare say I was taken in by her—just ordinary 'taken in,' like a tenderfoot. I gave her that fellow's address in New York." He nodded towards Kralinsky. "When I found he was here, I wired Logotheti to tell her, since she's after him. I suppose I thought Logotheti would go right away and find her, and get more mixed up with her than ever. It was mean of me, wasn't it? That's why I've told you. You see, I didn't know anything about all this, and that makes it meaner still, doesn't it?"

Possibly if he had told her these facts 48 hours earlier she might have been annoyed, but at present they seemed to be rather in his favor. At all events he was frank, she thought. He declared war on his rival, and meant to fight according to the law of nations. Lady Maud would not be his friend if he were playing any double game, but she had stuck to him throughout his trouble in the spring, he had emerged victorious and reinstated in public opinion, and she had been right. Lady Maud knew him better than any one else, and she was a good woman, if there ever was one.

Yet he had accused himself of having acted "meanly." Margaret did not like the word, and threw up her head as a horse does when a beginner holds on by the curb.

"You need not make yourself out worse than you are," she answered.

"I want to start fair," said the millionaire, "and I'd rather your impression should improve than get worse. The only real trouble with Lucifer was he started too high up."

This singular statement was made with perfect gravity, and without the slightest humorous intention, but Margaret laughed for the first time that day, in spite of the storm that was still raging in the near distance of her thoughts.

"Why do you laugh?" asked Van Torp. "It's quite true. I don't want to start too high up in your estimation and then be turned down as unfit for the position at the end of the first week. Put me where I belong and I won't disappoint you. Say I was doing something that wasn't exactly low-down, considering the object, but that mightn't pass muster at an honor parade, anyhow. And then say that I've admitted the fact, if you like, and that the better I know you the less I want to do anything mean. It won't be hard for you to look at it in that light, will it? And it'll give me the position of starting from the line. Is that right?"

"Yes," Margaret answered, smiling. "Slang 'right' and English 'right!' You ask for a fair field and no favor, and you shall have it."

"I'll go straight," Van Torp answered.

"I suppose Lady Maud will come, won't she?" he asked suddenly, after a short silence.

"I hope so," Margaret said. "If not, she will meet me in Paris, for she offers to do that in her letter."

"I'm staying on in this place because you said you didn't mind," observed Van Torp. "Do you want me to go away if she arrives?"

"Why should I? Why shouldn't you stay?"

"Oh, I don't know. I was only thinking. Much obliged anyway, and I'll certainly stay if you don't object. We shall be quite a party, shan't we? What with us three, and Lady Maud and Kralinsky there—"

Mrs. Rushmore and Kralinsky had stopped in their walk and were waiting for them. They quickened their pace.

"I thought perhaps this was far enough," said Mrs. Rushmore. "Of course I could go on further, and it's not your usual walk, my dear, but unless you mind—"

Margaret did not mind, and said so readily; whereupon Mrs. Rushmore deliberately took Van Torp for her companion on the way back.

"I'm sure you won't object to walking slowly," she said to him, "and Miss Donne and the count can go as fast as they like, for they are both good walkers. I am sure you must be a great walker," she added, turning to the Russian.

He smiled blandly and bent his head a little, as if he were acknowledging a compliment. Van Torp looked at him quietly.

WRIGLEY'S

RALLIED TO THE DEFENSE

Parlor Maid Was Loyal, But It Is Doubtful If Explanation Helped Matters Very Much.

Walter Lonsdale, Dr. Cook's secretary, was adducing facts in praise of Dr. Cook.

"And these facts," he concluded, "prove my chief's honor; and the other side's defense is as weak as the well-known defense of the parlor maid."

Mr. Lonsdale glanced at his luggage packed for Copenhagen. Then he laughed and resumed:

"'Mary,' said a mistress to her parlor maid, 'what time did my husband get home last night?'

"'Not till four, mum,' the maid answered.

"'I thought so,' said the mistress. 'Here, it's evening, and the brute not up yet!'

"The maid bridled defensively.

"'Oh, but, mum,' she said, 'he has been up once, mum; but he just drank his bath and went back to bed again.'"

Good results show after the first few doses. This also acts as a system builder, eventually restoring strength and vitality.

Nil Desperandum.

Percy Parkington rose and brushed the dust from his knees. Then, drawing himself up to his full height, he gazed resentfully upon the form of Miss Muriel Muggins, who nonchalantly fanned herself the while.

"Very well, Miss Muggins," came in bitter tones from Percy. "Oh, very well! You have spurned me, it is true! Indeed, you have spurned me twice! But, though despair eats my heart, I shall not die! I mean to go into the busy world. I will fight! I will win! My name shall become known, and my riches shall become envied—"

"Pardon me for interrupting you, Mr. Parkington," interjected Miss Muggins, "but when you shall have accomplished all that, you may try me again."—Lippincott's.

Her Idea of Discipline.

One day recently, just after the opening of the Baltimore schools, the teacher of a primary class had occasion right at the start to enforce discipline.

"Here, young man!" she exclaimed, indicating a pupil whose name she did not yet know. "I saw you laughing just now. That won't do. No laughing in this school."

"I was only thinking about something ma'am," said the youngster, sheepishly.

"Well, don't let that happen in school again," said the teacher, sternly.—Sunday Magazine of the Cleveland Leader.

HARD TO DROP

But Many Drop It.

A young Calif. wife talks about coffee:

"It was hard to drop Mocha and Java and give Postum a trial, but my nerves were so shattered that I was a nervous wreck and of course that means all kinds of ails.

"At first I thought bicycle riding caused it and I gave it up, but my condition remained unchanged. I did not want to acknowledge coffee caused the trouble for I was very fond of it. At that time a friend came to live with us, and I noticed that after he had been with us a week he would not drink his coffee any more. I asked him the reason. He replied, 'I have not had a headache since I left off drinking coffee, some months ago, till last week, when I began again, here at your table. I don't see how anyone can like coffee, anyway, after drinking Postum!'

"I said nothing, but at once ordered a package of Postum. That was five months ago, and we have drank no coffee since, except on two occasions when we had company, and the result each time was that my husband could not sleep, but lay awake and tossed and talked half the night. We were convinced that coffee caused his suffering, so he returned to Postum, convinced that coffee was an enemy, instead of a friend, and he is troubled no more with insomnia.

"I, myself, have gained 8 pounds in weight, and my nerves have ceased to quiver. It seems so easy now to quit coffee that caused our aches and ails and take up Postum."

Strange Action of Memory

Scenes of Other Days, Thought Forgotten, Are Suddenly Flashed Into the Mind.

Often suggestions out of all keeping with the surroundings come, and it may be asked, "What made you think of that?" Frequently we are positive that no conscious train of thought has brought up the idea. These memories out of all rhyme and reason with our atmosphere and conscious occupation, pop into the mind and surprise us with their incongruity. Are these spontaneously originated as they seem to be, or have we merely forgotten the connecting train of ideas, as is often contended? The author but recently, while looking at some dill pickles, had flash upon his mind the image of a Southern California beach and an incident associated with the scene. The memory came so suddenly and the connecting link was sought for so immediately that a dropping out of a segment of consciousness is altogether improbable, yet he felt that there was a connection somewhere, if it could but be found. And it was found after a little thought. Where the brine on the pickles had dried, there were left fine, white salt crystals just as he had seen on kelp and sea mosses that he had gathered on that beach. The memory in the stream of consciousness was spontaneous, and yet we see how it may come under our law, at least in its physiological version.—From the Mental Man.

A Fortunate Mishap.

In a certain New England town they manufacture a well-known kind of towel, most efficient for drying purposes. How that towel first happened to be made in the form which has proved so profitable to its makers is the subject of an amusing legend. It savors strongly of belonging to the "too good to be true" genus of anecdotes, and is as follows:

Once the machinery in the towel factory, busily engaged in turning out a very conventional brand of towel, suddenly went wrong and began, practically, to go backward. There was much excitement. Eventually the machinery was chastised and set to rights again.

But—it was discovered that the towels turned out during that interval of mechanical anarchy were of a texture quite unrivaled for use as bath towels. At once the machinery was set going backward again, and has been traveling in that direction ever since, to the great delight of the stockholders in the towel company.

All Off.

The Heiress—Have you seen papa?

The Duke—Yes. It's all off.

The Heiress—You don't mean to say that he refused to give his consent?

The Duke—Oh, no. He said he'd give his consent—but not another cent.—Stray Stories.

The Republicans of St. Paul are having a hard time to find a candidate for mayor. It's a case of "Let George do it" and George is balking.

The Democrats elected the mayor at Duluth and control the city council by 11 to 4. All three of the large cities of the state are under Democratic rule.

The Republican managers are entirely willing that John Lind take the presidency of the university. This would take the university, also John, out of politics.

W. E. McEwen, labor commissioner, will, it is said, be a candidate for the state senate from one of the Duluth districts. Billy is able and popular, and ought to win in a walk.

The Winona Independent intimates that the chief motive back of Governor Eberhart's conservation convention is a scheme to conserve the gubernatorial job to himself for the next three years.

There has been a divided opinion in the interpretation of the compulsory school law regarding the age to which a child must attend school. The matter has been submitted to the attorney-general for his ruling, who hands down a decision holding that a child is sixteen years of age until his seventeenth birthday, hence children are considered of school age until they have attained the age of seventeen years.

In regard to the meat boycott Senator Tillman says: "Any man who pinches his own belly because he does not know how to vote has no sympathy of mine." His language is Tillmanesque, but his idea is a sound one.

The building operations of the country now aggregate about $1,000,000,000 per year. The direct and indirect losses from fire in the United States during 1907 approximated $450,000,000 or one half the cost of construction. Of this loss four-fifths or on an average of $1,000,000 a day could be prevented.

Minnesota lost a valuable citizen in the death of Sydney M. Owen, editor of Farm, Stock and Home. Mr. Owen was one of the organizers of the farmers' alliance movement in the '80s, and later was identified with the Populists, being twice their candidate for governor In 1894 he received 88,000 votes, about 30,000 more than George L Becker, the Democatic nominee.

Wahpeton, a country town of North Dakota, enjoys a unique distinction, that of having two United States senators. They live across the street from each other and are both lawyers. One is a Republican the other a Democrat. It is not likely that Wahpeton can retain both senators indefinately, but in the present mix-up in North Dakota politics it is not impossible that both might be re-elected next year.

It is not peculiar that whenever an Indian reservation is opened the people will go crazy over the gambling features of the case and try to get lands, much of which is worthless, says the Breckenridge Telegram. In the meantime they overlook the fact that there is a million and a half acres of government lands right here in Minnesota which may be had for the asking. Of this tract Koochiching county has 367,700 acres; Lake, 82,000; Cook, 75,000; St. Louis, 122,000; Aitkin, 1,900; Cass, 262,000; Itasca, 24,000; Kittson, 9,244; Red Lake, 3,928; Roseau, 249,000; others scattering.

The report of Warden Wolfer shows that at present there are 665 prisoners in the penitentiary. Of this number eighty seven are serving life sentences and fourteen are serving twenty five years sentences Ten of the prisoners now in the penitentiary are over sixty years of age, but the majority of them range in age from thirty to 40. Twenty-six of them are less than twenty years of age. The social relations of the prisoners show that 444 of them are single, 186 are married, 14 are divorced, 88 are widowers and three are separated. 260 of the prisoners are intemperate in their habits. There are 55 total abstainers among them and the rest moderate in their habits. Fourteen of the prisoners had college education, 25 went thru high school, 368 had a common school education and 88 are illiterate.

EXCHANGE ECHOES.

St. Cloud Times: It is announced that prices of living commodities are higher in the United States today than anywhere in all the known world. So much for Taft and prosperity and the Payne-Aldrich tariff. How long, oh Lord, how long will a suffering people continue—to vote the Republican national ticket?

Duluth Herald: Paying $84,000 to induce a woman to keep silent looks expensive to an ordinary mortal. But, you know, everything is high these days and even the golden attribute of speech has to keep abreast of the times.

Hutchinson Leader: One of the most determined campaigns ever made in this country is in preparation to saddle on the taxpayers of the United States the iniquitous ship subsidy burden. The people have been fooled a long time by the plausible arguments of the high tariff beneficiaries who now want more loot in the form of ship subsidies.

Litchfield Independent: The Minnesota supreme court last week decided the reciprocal demurrage law to be constitutional. This law provides that the railroads must pay demurrage in case they do not furnish cars asked for by shippers within reasonable time. The railroads have always collected demurrage from shippers who did not unload and release cars within a specified time, but the shipper who applied for cars and had to wait days or weeks was given no recompense for his losses from such delay. The decision seems only fair and equitable.

Cannon Falls Beacon: Sometimes Mr. Tawney is funny and sometimes only ridiculous. The other day he gravely stated that high prices were attributable to the craze for automobiles, diamonds, seal coats, old laces, steam heated houses, boxes at the opera, etc. We do not see what this has to do with the prices of butter, eggs, pork, beef, potatoes, flour, calico and jeans; unless it is that the gentlemen who control by hook and by crook, the prices of these things have to put up prices so they can buy the things Mr. Tawney mentions. They are the same gentlemen who insisted on Mr. Tawney voting for the tariff bill, and who insist, and often in vain, on his voting for every other iniquitous measure their monopoly interests dictate.

"INSURGENTS" ARE TO BE DISCIPLINED

Mr. Owen has not yet been decided upon, although it is understood that there is a movement in Minneapolis in favor of S. P. Snider, formerly congressman from the Fourth District and two years ago a candidate for governor.

A Farmer Needed.

Possibly, however, neither Wheelock or Snider may land. There is really no good reason for appointing Wheelock, except that he is the son of his father, and Minneapolis has already two representatives on the board. I would look to the governor rather to recognise the importance of agricultural education by appointing some one prominently connected with the agricultural interests of the state to succeed Mr. Owen. Men well qualified to direct the activities of the agricultural school ought not to be hard to find in an agricultural state, although Mr. Owen's place will be no doubt difficult completely to fill.

A New Candidate.

They have a new Democratic candidate to contest the First district with Congressman Tawney. This time he comes from Olmestead county, one of the richest and most populous in the district. Judge Christensen has for eight years occupied the probate office although the county is strongly Republican and he is a Democrat. He is an attorney and a good speaker. Also, in this district this is not the least of his recommendations, he is a Scandinavian. His boom which was launched this week gives promise of becoming formidable.

Dinehart's Attitude.

In the Second district Mr. Dinehart's friends maintain that his nomination is making a satisfactory progress. R. L. Mork, who was in town this week claims that he will have a big lead in Faribault county. Mr. Dinehart was a member of the delegation which called on the governor a week ago, and is understood to approve the policy outlined by the governor as a result of his conference with the president. That is really the logical attitude for him to assume. It is difficult to understand on what other grounds he can contest the district with Mr. Hammond, except that the reactionaries were right and the insurgents who voted with Mr. Hammond were wrong.

The Gubernatorial Tangle.

Some of the governor's supporters are becoming restive under the persistent criticism from influential quarters to which he has recently been subjected, and are beginning to question the advisability of holding a general conference of the leaders to decide as to where they shall throw their strength. Ripley Brower is regarded as the alternative candidate of certain powerful interests. It is understood that in the Sixth district where Mr. Brower resides the revolt in his favor has assumed formidable proportions. There is a reason to believe that certain prominent St. Paul politicians are seriously debating the propriety of making a switch. In case Brower decides to enter the field, and he is known to be considering the matter, the candidacy of of Wm. E. Lee is likely to become formidable. Mr. Lee will welcome a division of the organization forces as it is understood to be a part of his plan to play up to the county option and anti-saloon league element and appeal to the people on a radical reform platform.

A Vision

By F. A. MITCHEL

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

"Are you ill, sir?"

I looked up dazed. I made no reply, for I was engaged in getting my bearings.

"This is the Tower?" I asked presently.

"Yes, sir."

I was sitting on a bench in an open court in the Tower of London. Before me was a piece of pavement different from the rest, some fifteen or twenty feet square and in its center a plate on which was an inscription. I remembered being the evening before in the quarters of one of the Tower officials, and that was all. How I came to be seated on the bench in the early morning I have never to this day fully determined. At 11 I had started for my lodgings in Oxford street, but I could not remember going there. One of the Tower attendants, commonly called "beefeaters," had roused me.

If how I came to be there is a mystery, what I saw there is a still greater one. I had been sitting a long while. Of that I was fully conscious. Whether it was night or day I have no recollection, but the scene I witnessed seems to me to have been enacted in the day. My first remembrance is hearing shouts of "Long live Queen Mary!" but they seemed to come from without the inclosure. Within a few persons hurried by silently, as if in preparation for some momentous event. They were all serious, and one or two of them were in tears.

Then I was conscious of a number of persons sitting with me about the square bit of pavement, though the seats on which they sat were of rough hewn wood. The men wore trunks, hose, doublets and hats decorated with feathers, the women stomachers and large ruffled collars. Covering the square place on the pavement I have mentioned was a platform on which rested a rectangular block of wood about two feet high and hollowed at the top on both sides. Beside it, leaning on a huge ax, was a tall figure in tight fitting costume. Those about the platform, which was plainly a scaffold, wore serious countenances. Without the Tower inclosure I heard sounds indicating commotion: "The duke's finished; death to all traitors!" A man sitting next me whispered to another, "It's all over up on the hill."

A horror crept over me. I would gladly have gone away, but had no power to move. Looking down toward the other end of the court where there were buildings for dwelling purposes, I saw a lovely apparition at a window, a young girl apparently from seventeen to twenty years old. At the same time I heard the rumbling of a cart. Two young girls attendant on the one at the window tried to draw her away, but she would not go.

"It is the body of her husband," I heard some one say. "He's been executed on Tower hill."

When the cart had passed there was an interval that my memory fails to fill, but the next scene was the opening of the door under the window at which the young lady had appeared, and she came out with an officer, attended by the two girls I had seen with her and a priest. She came toward the scaffold reading from a book and praying. When she reached the scaffold she ascended the steps with as much composure as if she were going to her chamber and stood waiting for silence. When it came she spoke to the people, but I have no remembrance of what she said. There she knelt, prayed and asked permission of the priest to say a psalm.

These religious features ended, she took off her gloves and her kerchief, which she handed to one of her maids, and loosened her gown. The executioner knelt before her and asked forgiveness for what he was about to do. The girl then tied a handkerchief over her eyes with her own hands. Groping for the block, she asked, "Where is it?" Guided to it, she knelt and laid her neck on it, saying, "Lord, into thy hands I commend my spirit." The last I remember was the ax swinging over her.

"Have you been sitting here all night, sir?" asked the attendant.

"I don't know. I have a vague recollection gradually coming back to me of having followed last night when I started to go home a figure dressed in singular costume."

At that moment my eyes rested on the plate in the center of the marked square. I saw the name Lady Jane Grey. I read that she, Anna Boleyn and Catherine Howard were all executed there. My horror of the night before returned. I rose and was staggering away when the attendant, putting his arm through mine, assisted me, taking me to the gate and calling a cab for me. I was driven to my lodgings and did not leave them for a fortnight.

When I got out I had a longing to know something of Lady Jane Grey, but dreaded to bring back my experience of that gruesome night. After a few months had passed I mustered courage to read her life. I found events attending her execution the same as I witnessed in my vision, my dream or whatever it was. Those who attended her at her death have testified to her serenity.

Years afterward in a gallery of a noble family of England I saw a portrait of Lady Jane Grey's husband, Lord Guildford Dudley. He was the man who led me to the place of the scaffold.

The Ruling Passion.

An old Irishwoman, in describing a "gone but not forgotten," said: "Mike was the foine man entoirely, and he'd be living now if it wasn't for the dhrink. He had a dog, and sure thet baste would bring him home from the saloon whin he was so blind wid liquor he couldn't see a shtep before him. And whin he died—'tis the truth I'm shpaking—his ghost walked at night, back and foorth, betune the saloon and his house, and bedad 'twas so dhrrunk his dog knew him!"

S.S.S. CURES OLD SORES

Every old sore is an infected spot on the flesh, kept open by constant drainage of impure blood into the place.

One of the principal constituents of blood is plasma, a healing property. Where the circulation is pure this element of the blood, which is of a glutinous or sticky nature, performs the necessary work in healing all sores, wounds and lacerations. It does this by sticking or joining the parts together, while nature causes a knitting of the tissues and solidifies the place.

This healing property is frequently destroyed by impure accumulations in the blood, and this vital fluid not only loses its power to heal, but becomes a source of irritation and disease to any open sore or ulcer on the body. Constantly it discharges its morbid matters into the place, and gradually it causes the infection to spread, and the sore enlarges. The morbid matter in the blood comes from different causes. A long spell of debilitating sickness, which breeds disease germs in the system, the retention of the refuse matters of the body because of a sluggish condition of the eliminative members, a continued malarial state of the system, inherited bad blood, etc., are usually responsible.

CURED OF EATING SORE.

Dear Sirs:—I was suffering greatly from a sore on my left breast, which had begun to eat, and at times deep, shooting pains would pass through it, and the ulcer was discharging yellow and rather offensive matter. I consulted physicians, but their treatment did not benefit me very much. My condition seemed hopeless, and I had almost despaired of getting well. I knew that the disease was hereditary in my case, as an only sister, my mother and two of her sisters had died of Cancer of the breast. After I had finished the first bottle of S. S. S. I felt some better, so continued it until I was cured.

MRS. JAMES CASSELL,
Belton, Mo.

S. S. S. heals sores and ulcers in the very simplest way. It just goes into the circulation, and removes the impurities and polluted matter that are the means of keeping the ulcer open; then the sore is bound to heal. S.S.S. is the greatest of all blood purifiers, and not only does it cleanse the circulation, but it adds every necessary property to it to promote good health. It is of the very greatest tonic value, and those who have been weakened and run down by the constitutional drainage of an old sore will find it the very remedy needed. S.S.S. does not simply cause a scab to come over an old sore, but beginning at the bottom it heals the place permanently by building new tissue and filling in the place with firm, healthy flesh. A Task.

To be honest, to be kind, to earn a little and to spend less, to make, upon the whole, a family happier by his presence, to renounce where that shall be necessary and not to be imbittered, to keep a few friends, but these without capitulation; above all, on the same grim conditions to keep friends with himself—here is a task for all that a man has of fortitude and delicacy.—Robert Louis Stevenson.

He Knew the Ropes.

During a special service in a Philadelphia church a few days ago the officiating clergyman engaged in calling those wishing to confess conversion to proceed to the altar when a stranger arose from his seat and slowly walked to the altar railing. The visitor informed the minister that he had decided to abandon his present mode of living and turn over a new leaf.

"Brother," said the clergyman, "do you think you can walk the straight and narrow path?"

"Straight and narrow path!" exclaimed the stranger. "Why, parson, that will be a cinch for me. I've been a tight rope walker for fifteen years."

Timid Applause.

During the earlier days of the reign of Queen Victoria dramatic performances were given at Windsor castle under the management of Charles Kean. The audiences being limited and stiffly aristocratic, the applause was naturally not especially hearty, and the comedians felt the absence of the more demonstrative approval manifested in the regular theater.

One evening the queen sent an equerry to Mr. Kean to know if the actors would like anything (meaning refreshments), when the actor replied, "Say to her majesty that we should be grateful for a little applause when the spectators are pleased."

Back went the equerry and conveyed the message. At the end of the act there was a slight suggestion of hand clapping and exceedingly gentle foot tapping. James Wallack, who knew nothing of the message sent to the queen, hearing the mild demonstration, pricked up his ears and inquired, "What is that?"

Mr. Kean replied, "That, my dear Wallack, is applause."

"God bless me!" retorted Wallack. "I thought it was some one shelling peas."

Optimistic.

Some time ago there was a flood in western Pennsylvania. An old fellow who had lost nearly everything he possessed was sitting on the roof of the house as it floated along, when a boat approached.

"Hello, John."

"Hello, Dave."

"Are your fowls all washed away, John?"

"Yes, but the ducks can swim," replied the old man.

"Apple trees gone?"

"Well, they said the crop would be a failure, anyhow."

"I see the flood's away above your window."

"That's all right, Dave. Them winders needed washin', anyhow."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Mr. Keating was a young man who had a natural gift as a financial operator. Only twenty-six years old, he had carried through several deals in stocks. He had met Miss Ethel Lamb, who was quite willing to marry him. Not that he had asked her, for he had not; he wished to get himself in better financial shape before doing so.

"Mr. Keating," she said to him one evening, "I am so anxious to make a little money. I want it for a certain purpose. It's something I can't tell you about, for I have promised not to tell any one. You see, there are several of us interested in it, and I would not be justified in telling their secret."

"Certainly not. Some social move, I suppose?"

"No, it's not social."

"Oh, you are going in for some of these fads the rich women are taking up—woman voting, helping women operatives who strike or something of that kind."

"Nothing of the sort. I see you have got a wrong impression entirely, so I'll have to tell you."

And she did. They were going to endow a colored church.

"That's a laudable object, and I'd be very mean not to help you. Would a hundred dollars do?"

"We wish to make ten thousand. Now, it seems to me that if you would give us a—what do you call it?"

"A tip?"

"Yes; a tip when some stock you are going to make money in is going up, so that we can buy some of it. We can make all we want"—

"In one fell swoop."

"Yes, that's it. Without having to beg it in little lots, get up fairs and all that sort of thing."

"Very well. I'm thinking of a little scheme now. If it comes to anything I'll let you know."

Not long after that Mr. Keating called on Miss Lamb and asked if he could speak to her without being overheard. She shut all the doors, and he said to her in a low tone:

"If I give you a tip will you be sure not to tell any one?"

"Certainly."

"Well, buy Jimberjaw Lead. You'll make your $10,000. But if you should lose I'll stand your loss myself."

Miss Ethel Lamb thanked her informer, though she said it wouldn't be quite fair for him to stand any loss. Still, since there wouldn't be any loss there wouldn't be anything for him to stand.

The next day she went to a friend who was a stockbroker and told him that she had received a tip on Jimberjaw Lead and asked him to buy some of the stock for her. She had no money to put up for a margin, but he told her that if she would convince him that the tip was reliable he would buy some stock for her without any margin.

Miss Lamb remembered her promise, but, considering the cause she was working for warranted her breaking it, concluded to tell him provided he would promise solemnly not to tell a single person. He promised, and she told him that the tip had come from Mr Keating.

He opened his eyes, but said nothing and the next morning she received a notice of the purchase of 500 shares of Jimberjaw Lead. As soon as she had left the office the broker told his partners that Keating had tipped a lady he (the broker) happened to know Keating was attentive to that there was to be a movement in Jimberjaw Lead. This was done in the private office, where no one except the members of the firm could hear.

A number of customers doing business with the firm were quietly advised to buy a little of the stock without having been given the source from which the information about it came. But the clerks, seeing large orders for the shares going into the exchange, took fliers and confidentially told the clerks of other offices.

Very soon the price of Jimberjaw Lead began to rise, at first slowly, but in time rapidly. Then it began to jump. One morning Miss Lamb was informed by her broker that she had a profit of $6,000. Would she sell? She said she would like first to ask her tipper. She telephoned Keating for information, who told her to hold on and she would surely make her $10,000. This information she communicated to her brokers, and it radiated in many directions.

There were large sales of Jimberjaw Lead for a few days, the stock gaining and losing in price alternately; then it began to go down. Suddenly a large lot was dropped on the market, and Miss Lamb's profit was wiped out. From that time forward it sank slowly until she had lost some $3,000.

She sent for Mr. Keating.

"What shall I do?" she moaned. "I've lost money I can't pay."

"Didn't I tell you I would stand your loss?"

"Yes, but I don't like to have you do that. Besides, the church!"

"I'll take care of the church."

This somewhat reassured her.

"I am abundantly able to give $10,000 to your church project since I have sold out shares that have been on my hands for two years at a handsome profit. You enabled me to do so."

"I! How?"

"By confiding my secret to another."

"You wretch!"

"I forgive you on one condition—that you help me to spend the profits as my wife."

His Double Affliction.

In Paris there is a blind man who carries a board bearing this singular sign: "Blind by Birth and by Accident."

"Look here, my good man," said a passerby; "your sign is positively distracting! Can you tell me how you come to be blind by birth and by accident at the same time?"

"Easy enough!" said the old man. "You see, I'm blind by birth myself, and I've bought out a blind man who did business at the other end of the bridge. He was blind by accident!"

Brown and Black.

In one of the middle west cities there lived a local wit and his favorite butt. Both were prominent clubmen and enlivened the same social set. One was named Black and the other Brown. Black was immaculate in his dress, while Brown was careless, often wearing his finger nails in mourning and a not immaculate collar with a dress suit. But family connections excused his shortcomings. One evening the pair arrived at a reception and met the hostess simultaneously. The two names mentioned together suggested a bon mot to Brown, but the opening was disastrous.

"The colors are very much in evidence tonight," said Brown.

To which their hostess replied, "Yes I see they are, and, if rumor is to be credited, they are fast colors."

"No, no," broke in Black. "Brown won't wash."

Severely Proper.

A Boston girl the other day said to a southern friend who was visiting her as two men rose in a car to give them seats, "Oh, I wish they would not do it!"

"Why not? I think it is very nice of them," said her friend, settling herself comfortably.

"Yes, but one can't thank them, you know, and it is so awkward."

"Can't thank them! Why not?"

"Why, you would not speak to a strange man, would you?" said the Boston maiden, to the astonishment of her southern friend.

A Shock For Mansfield.

Mr. Mansfield's dignity was very great. He conducted himself toward others in a dignified way. He expected others to conduct themselves toward him in like manner.

But once, in Chicago, Mr. Mansfield was touched on the raw by a manager. It was the first night of a Cyrano de Bergerac tour. The great actor, his delicate nerves a-quiver, was making up with his dresser's help when the manager rushed into the dressing room without knocking, slapped Mr. Mansfield heartily on the back and shouted:

"The house is packed! There ain't even no more standin' room! Now, Dick, old man, sail in and show 'em what yer made of!"

The dresser used to say if he hadn't hustled that manager out Cyrano would have run him through with his sword.

A Grim Outlook.

A lady visiting Colorado suffered greatly from the elevation. One day after an attack of breathlessness she sighed out, "I am sure I will die!"

"Will you go to heaven if you die?" inquired her little son anxiously.

"I hope so, dear."

The small boy burst into tears. "Oh, mother, dear," he sobbed, "don't—don't go to heaven! You could never stand the altitude."

Early Conspiracies Against Lincoln

by John W. Nicholls

Abraham Lincoln

Mrs. Lincoln

ABOUT the middle of August, 1862, Company K of the One hundred and fifth Pennsylvania volunteers, known as the "Bucktail" regiment, of which I was a private, was detailed as a bodyguard of President Lincoln and continued in that capacity until his assassination in the spring of 1865. During the three years of my stay in Washington, the most critical period of the nation's history, I saw and heard many things that have never found their way into the public prints. Some of the bodyguard were constantly with the president and his family, whether at fashionable levees, receptions to foreign legations or private interviews. At all such functions we were silent spectators of all that took place. We were always treated with the highest respect by the Lincoln family, who regarded us as a part of the household. Every private of the guard received the same attentions of courtesy as the most famous statesman or diplomat at the capital. We all formed a strong personal attachment for the president and when the grand old man laid down his life in behalf of the cause that had been his life work we felt as if we had lost the dearest friend we ever had.

During the first two years of our term of service the most rigid discipline was enforced. Sometimes we would be ordered to use extraordinary vigilance and to let no one enter the grounds of the White House without the proper passes and to be very particular as to who approached the president. Often the order would come for the guards on duty to be doubled. It was seldom that he knew the direct cause of these extra precautions, but we supposed that the officers of the secret service were in possession of information of some plot that brooded harm to the president.

Up to 1864, owing to our vigilance and the protecting hand of Providence, our beloved chief had escaped the hand of violence. The back of the confederacy was broken, a good feeling pervaded all Washington and consequently the strict watchfulness that had prevailed grew into laxity. This was the fatal period, for it was at this time that conspiracies were hatched and confederates overran the city, comparatively unmolested. The president and family spent the summer at the soldier's home, situated about three miles north of the city, and thither the bodyguard always accompanied them.

It was in the summer of 1864, while we were up at the home, that an incident happened that came very near culminating in just such an awful tragedy as followed only a few months later at Ford's theater. It was the custom of the president to remain late at the war department when anything of great importance was happening in the army, consulting with the secretary of war and transmitting and receiving dispatches, and after his work was finished he would ride out to the soldiers' home. That summer he had persistently refused an escort, imagining himself perfectly secure.

One night about the middle of August I was doing sentry duty at the large gate through which entrance was had into the grounds at the home. The place is situated about a quarter of a mile off the Bladensburg road and is reached by a devious driveway. About one o'clock I heard a rifle shot in the direction of the city and shortly afterward could hear approaching hoofbeats. In two or three minutes the horse came near enough so that in the dim moonlight I recognized the rider as the belated president. The horse, a very spirited one, belonging to Lamon, the marshal of the District of Columbia, was Mr. Lincoln's favorite saddle animal and when he was in the White House stables he always chose him.

As horse and rider approached the gate I noticed that the president was bareheaded. After I had assisted him in checking his steed the president said to me:

"He came pretty near getting away with me, didn't he? He took the bit in his teeth before I could draw the reins."

I then asked him where his hat was and he replied that somebody had fired a gun off down at the foot of the hill, which scared his horse, and the lurch of the animal toppled his hat off. I led the horse to the cottage where the president and his family was staying. There he dismounted and went in.

Thinking the proceeding a little strange, a corporal and I started in the direction from which the report of the gun had been heard, to investigate. When we came to the place where the driveway meets the main road we found the president's hat—a plain silk hat—and on examining it found a bullet hole through the corner of the crown. The shot had been fired upward and it was evident that the person who had fired it had secreted himself close to the roadside. We listened and searched the locality thoroughly, but to no avail.

The next day I gave Mr. Lincoln his hat and called his attention to the bullet hole. He unconcernedly remarked that it was put there by some foolish gunner and was not intended for him. He said, however, that he wanted the matter kept quiet and admonished us to say nothing about it.

The next fall, after we had taken up our winter quarters at the White House, a conspiracy to kidnap the president was unknowingly frustrated by us. Had the truth of the affair leaked out at the time it doubtless would have created great excitement. Our quarters were immediately in front of the south porch of the Executive Mansion, a position which placed us at about equal distance from the treasury building on the east and the war and navy building on the west.

For reasons at the time unknown to us we were ordered to move our guard tent and place it at the west end of the gravel walk, directly in the rear of the war department. While we stayed there nothing occurred to arouse suspicion. Shortly afterward we learned, however, that on the very night after we had moved the tent the confederates had a plan laid to capture the president. The conspirators were to hide in the shrubbery and when the president came along the walk they were to seize, gag and carry him across the river into Virginia. Thence he was to be taken to Richmond or some other confederate stronghold, where he was to be held as a hostage. The members of the bodyguard always supposed that the conspirators were frightened away when they saw our guard tent and abandoned the plan of kidnapping.

Not long after the attempted kidnapping another episode took place, which afterward was found to have been planned by a band of assassins who made their headquarters in the city. Bourke, the veteran coachman, who had served at the White House through Pierce's and Buchanan's administrations and thus far into Lincoln's, was taken sick and compelled to be off duty.

Immediately a stranger, who represented himself as an experienced coachman from Baltimore, applied at the White House and was employed as coachman. From the first he was domineering and after a few weeks became so important that he was discharged and Bourke reinstated.

One night shortly afterward, just about dusk, the discharged coachman was seen sneaking around the stables by some of the guard. The stables had been locked for the night and it was not supposed that he could do any damage and consequently the men who saw him did not go to the stables. Presently the whole interior of the barns was found to be on fire. The guard was called out and by dint of great exertion we saved the president's coach and team, but Tad Lincoln's ponies and Col. Hay's carriage team perished in the flames.

The plan was to have this man fire the stables and thus to distract our attention. During the excitement some of the conspirators were ready to rush into the White House and murder the president, but instead of remaining in the house Mr. Lincoln ran out among us and thus in all probability frustrated another attempt at assassination.

What makes this appear more likely now is the fact that, after the incendiary was arrested he produced several witnesses, who later found employment at Ford's theater, to testify that he was down in the city during the whole of the evening. These were the persons who doubtless planned the final conspiracy that brought the great benefactor to the grave.

GIRL DEFIED A WHOLE ARMY.

Feminine Toll-Gate Keeper Paid by Government.

It is related that the army, headed by Sheridan and his staff, left Winchester by the valley pike early in the morning, the column moving toward Stephens City. Just as day was breaking the staff reached the toll-gate and was much discomfited to find the toll-pole down and guarded by a young and beautiful girl, Charlotte Hillman, famed locally for her girlish charms. Even the war-hardened Sheridan seems not to have been proof against the persuasion of a pair of black eyes and a pretty face, and when toll was demanded, straightway produced the tithe, setting an example that was followed by his staff.

"But," said Sheridan, as he passed through the gate, "I cannot vouch for my army."

When the common soldiery came the girl again lowered the toll-bar and demanded toll. This was met by jeers from the soldiers, whereupon she wisely raised the guard. All day the dusty troopers passed through and all day Charlotte Hillman stood at her post. For every ten soldiers who passed the gate she cut a notch in the toll-pole. Early fled beyond the Blue Ridge with the remnants of his disorganized army; in the Valley of Virginia, Lee, beaten back by Grant's overwhelming numbers, gave up the fight; in the southeast Joe Johnston fired the last burlesque shots and peace came again over the north and south. Then, when relations with Washington had been re-established and the administration's policy was one of magnanimity, Charlotte Hillman counted the notches in the toll-pole and sent her bill to Washington. And the bill was paid.—Metropolitan Magazine.

"The Blood is The Life"

Science has never gone beyond the above simple statement of scripture. But it has illuminated that statement and given it a meaning ever broadening with the increasing breadth of knowledge. When the blood is "bad" or impure it is not alone the body which suffers through disease. The brain is also clouded, the mind and judgement are effected, and many an evil deed or impure thought may be directly traced to the impurity of the blood.

Foul, impure blood can be made pure by the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It enriches and purifies the blood thereby curing, pimples, blotches, eruptions and other cutaneous affections, as eczema, tetter, or salt-rheum, hives and other manifestations of impure blood.

In the cure of scrofulous swellings, enlarged glands, open eating ulcers, or old sores, the "Golden Medical Discovery" has performed the most marvelous cures. In cases of old sores, or open eating ulcers, it is well to apply to the open sores Dr. Pierce's All-Healing Salve, which possesses wonderful healing potency when used as an application to the sores in conjunction with the use of "Golden Medical Discovery" as a blood cleansing constitutional treatment. If your druggist don't happen to have the "All-Healing Salve" in stock, you can easily procure it by inclosing fifty cents in postage stamps to Dr. R.V. Pierce, 663 Main St., Buffalo, N. Y., and it will come to you by return post. Most druggists keep it as well as the "Golden Medical Discovery."

You can't afford to accept any medicine of unknown composition as a substitute for "Golden Medical Discovery," which is a medicine OF KNOWN COMPOSITION, having a complete list of ingredients in plain English on its bottle-wrapper, the same being attested as correct under oath.

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets regulate and invigorate stomach, liver and bowels.

IS NEW SENATOR

COL. W. E. PURCELL TAKES OATH OF OFFICE AT NATION'S CAPITOL.

SENATOR THOMPSON ILL

Senator Money Presents Purcell's Name in Senate—Ex-Senator Thompson Grows Worse.

Washington, Feb. 1.—Hon. Fountain L. Thompson, recently appointed senator from North Dakota, has resigned on account of ill health, and Hon. W. E. Purcell of Wahpeton has been appointed his successor. The announcement was made in the senate today by Senator Money, and Mr. Purcell was sworn in.

Senator Thompson took his seat in the senate Dec. 6, last, having been appointed on Nov. 10 to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Senator Martin N. Johnson of North Dakota, during the recess of congress.

The intention of Senator Thompson to resign had been kept a profound secret about the senate and few had notice of such a purpose on his part. A large majority of senators were in ignorance until 12 o'clock today, when Mr. Purcell appeared in the senate. He was accompanied by Senator Money, chairman of the democratic caucus, who introduced him to a number of senators from both sides of the chamber.

HON. W. E. PURCELL.
North Dakota Senator Who Was Recently Sworn in.

Was born in Flemington, N. J., Aug. 3, 1856. He was educated in the common schools, worked on a farm, studied law when 20 years of age, and was admitted to practice. He came to Dakota in 1881 and settled at Wahpeton. He has been United States attorney for the territory, member of the constitutional convention and has been a member of the democratic national committee. He was elected to the state senate from the Twelfth district as a democrat. He is married and has no children.

A few minutes later Money sent up the certificate of Governor Burke, announcing the appointment and the new senator's colleague. Mr. McCumber, asked that Purcell be sworn in. Burrows, as chairman of the committee on privilege and elections, objected. He called attention to the fact that the certificate was addressed to Purcell himself, and not to the senate. This was irregular and he thought the senate should take until tomorrow to investigate.

SEN. L. F. THOMPSON.
Recently Resigned Who Is Now In Texas for Health.

Both Messrs. Money and McCumber protested, and ultimately Mr. Burrows withdrew his objection. Mr. Purcell was then escorted to the vice president's desk and the oath of office administered.

The appointment of J. V. Brooks as private secretary was one of the first official acts of the new senator. Brooks served in a similar capacity to Thompson.

Rescuers Work All Night.

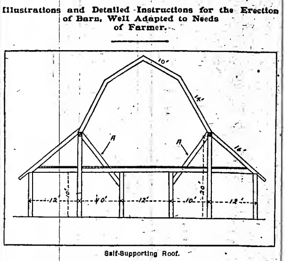
Primero, Col., Feb. 2.—All night long fresh parties of rescuers battled with the deadly black damp for control of the main mine of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., whose four score miners were killed by an explosion Monday.

Directing the air currents with braces of timber and canvas the rescuers penetrated almost the entire length of the main slope, where the most disastrous effects of the explosion were felt. Several bodies were recovered this morning.

With the arrival of daylight, the care-worn anxious watchers again pressed against the lines fencing off the shaft.

PLAN FOR CONSTRUCTING SELF-SUPPORTING ROOF

Illustrations and Detailed Instructions for the Erection of Barn, Well Adapted to Needs of Farmer.



Self-Supporting Roof.

The accompanying illustrations show two barns constructed with self-supporting roofs. In Fig. 2 is shown two methods of bracing a small, self-supporting roof, that would in our opinion be suitable for a building of this width, writes J. E. Bridgman in Farmers' Review. Either method may be used with safety. The braces are nailed on both sides of the rafters and as will be seen the sizes of all timbers are given. No rods are necessary. The two braces marked "A-A," as shown in our correspondent's plan, may be eliminated, as they would only be in the way. Bolts would do no harm, but would do very little good, as they work loose in a very short time. The joints should be made neat and close fitting and be well nailed. Short pieces should be placed between the braces, where the space is over four feet long.

As to the thrust of the rafters on the plate, several things must be considered: First, the wind pressure; second, the snow load, and last the weight of the timbers themselves. On the shed roof the timbers would weigh practically eight pounds per square foot; the snow load would be about 10 pounds and the wind pressure about 15 pounds in a heavy wind storm. This gives a total weight of 33 pounds per square foot. The rafters are 16 feet long, which gives us a load of 528 pounds per running foot to be carried by the plates. One-fourth of this load, however, will be carried by the upper plate. The main roof timbers would weigh practically 11 pounds per square foot. The wind pressure could be fixed at 18 pounds per foot and the snow load 10 pounds, which gives us a total of 39 pounds per square foot. The rafters on the main roof are 24 feet long, giving us a total load of 936 pounds. To this must be added one-fourth of the weight of the shed roof, 132 pounds, and we have 1,068 pounds per running foot, that must be carried by the plates of the main barn. This, it will be understood, is during a storm period, when the wind has a velocity of 60 miles per hour.

I am not personally in favor of building sheds or shed roofs in the construction of new buildings.

TURKEYS RAISED FOR PROFIT

Some Good, Practical Suggestions from One Who for Years Made a Success in Breeding Them.

(By MISS M. CHANDLER.)

After successfully raising turkeys for a number of years I am able to give a few practical and useful hints on the subject which cannot fail to be of great benefit to the new beginner or perhaps to the ones who have been trying to raise turkeys with but poor success.

Turkeys, as we all know, are considered more difficult to raise than are chickens, on account of their being more sensitive to the damp and cold of spring, and for this reason many do not try to raise them at all.

I find that if turkeys are not hatched before May 1 it is less trouble to care for them and they are more apt to live.

It pays best to start with a small flock. Never keep over winter more than three hens and a gobbler. Right here let me say, be sure to get your gobbler and hens of different flocks in starting, and if you have your own trade with some one, so that they will not be related to the hens.

Inbreeding is the cause very frequently of blindness. I have seen inquiries in many farm papers as to the probable cause of blindness, and experience has taught me that this is the sole cause.

It is unwise to set the old turkey the first time she gets broody, but break her up to lay more eggs and set a hen or two in her place.

When a hen is set, never use more than eight or ten eggs, and even then select a large hen.

Give her a warm place to sit and saturate the nest well with sulphur to keep away vermin. Use sulphur on the hen also.

A hen that is to sit for four weeks must be well fed and cared for. Give her plenty of fresh water and exercise and a small ration of good cornmeal wet with milk once each day.

When a brood of little turkeys are first hatched they are very weakly and should not be taken from the nest for at least twelve hours.

Warm, waterproof coops should be provided for them. Large dry goods boxes, such as can be bought for about 25 cents, make excellent coops.

Turn them on their side, with blocks under the corner to keep them off the ground. Nail strips of board over every crack. The top of the box forms the front of the coop. Nail lath across the front so close together that the little ones cannot crawl through, and make a little door through which to feed and water them at one end.

I feed them on bread and milk for a few days and then give them cornmeal wet with sweet milk and a pinch of salt and some clean sand.

Dutch cheese is also good for a change. They are very fond of it and it aids digestion. Give them plenty of water, but do not leave it where they can tumble into it, as a good wetting is most certain to be the death of a little turkey.

When they are a few days old I take off a lath from the front of the coop and let them run out after the dew is off. If the nights are chilly or the weather should be damp, cover the coop well with a warm blanket.

The last year I raised turkeys I learned something very helpful. I put the coop under a large tree, where there was shade in the afternoon and found that the little "turks" never left the shade and did not run off into the grass and weeds and get lost, as they had formerly done. They cannot endure the hot sun.

Eradicate Cut Worms.

Prevention is the only way to save plants from the ravages of cut worms. Use salt on the garden plat; let the chickens have the run of the garden where there are no crops in that they will destroy; plow and stir the ground in the fall and winter so often the pests will be routed out of their nests, and then when you get the plants put an old fruit can, quart size, with top and bottom taken out, over each plant so if there should be a stray worm he cannot get the plant. Keep a watch, and if a plant is eaten hunt for the worm and kill him and set another plant.

Dried Eggs.

Dried eggs are now put up at Topeka and Wichita, Kan. The Topeka plant has consumed 1,360,000 dozen eggs in 25 weeks. Three dozen fresh eggs are needed to make a pound of the dried variety. Dried eggs are used by bakers and boarding houses and on ships, where the fresh variety is impossible to obtain. At present most of the dried eggs used in this country come from Russia, China and Japan. The present status of the new tariff bill admits dried eggs free.

New Harvester.

A new harvesting machine has been introduced in Nebraska. The harvester is propelled by its own power, and is followed by a truck carrying gasoline engine which operates the harvesting mechanism of the machine. This is used mainly in wet fields where the power of the harvester is not sufficient to make headway.

WORTH KNOWING.

Simple Remedy That Anyone Can Prepare at Home.

Most people are more or less subject to coughs and colds. A simple remedy that will break up a cold quickly and cure any cough that is curable is made by mixing two ounces of Glycerine, a half-ounce of Virgin Oil of Pine compound pure and eight ounces of pure Whisky. You can get these in any good drug store and easily mix them in a large bottle. The mixture is highly recommended by the Leach Chemical Co. of Cincinnati, who prepare the genuine Virgin Oil of Pine compound pure for dispensing.

I began using Doan's Kidney Pills, and after taking a few boxes was cured and have been well ever since."

Fog-Eye's Plaintive Protest.

Fog-Eye Smith of northwest Wyoming bore an appalling facade. His style of beauty was a blight. Depending upon his horrific exterior, he was in the habit of trying to awe newcomers. On one occasion, affecting some displeasure at the manner in which a pallid stranger watered his liquor, Mr. Smith announced, frowning, that unless he detected immediate amendments he would send the neophyte home in a market basket. "Which I'll sure tear you up a whole lot," said Fog-Eye. Half an hour later Mr. Smith was found groping about on the floor under the poker table, hunting for his glass eye, and muttering to himself. The stranger asked with some evidence of impatience what new line of sentiments Mr. Smith was now harboring. That injured recluse, glaring malevolently from beneath the furniture, replied: "Which I sure do hate a man with no sense of humor."

There was a big crowd of members of the M. B. A. lodge and invited guests at the "nationality dance" given at M. B. A. hall Monday evening. Many striking costumes were worn and the dance was pronounced a social success.

J. D. Houston, the new land man, has opened an office in Red Lake Falls. He has leased the Bourdon building, south of Groshong's meat market. Mr. Houston says he expects to bring many prospective purchasers of Red Lake county real estate to Red Lake Falls the coming season.

The Scrap Book

She Started Early.

There was a sergeant in an English regiment who was a martinet of the meanest kind, a veritable tyrant, whom the men thoroughly detested. The sergeant decided to get married, and the men of the regiment decided that when the happy event came off it it would be a fitting occasion to pay back with interest old scores.

CAUGHT HIM JUST ABOVE THE EYE.

On the eventful day when the happy pair emerged from their quarters they were greeted with a perfect shower of rice and old shoes, but one Tommy had slyly substituted a big pair of regulation Blucher boots, which he threw with such unerring aim that the missile caught the sergeant just above the eye, inflicting a nasty cut.

Directly the ceremony was over the sergeant immediately went to the hospital to have the wound dressed. The doctor, after examining the swollen and discolored optic, inquired how it was done.

"Well, sir," replied the sergeant, "I got married today, and"—

Here he was cut short by the doctor, a married man, exclaiming:

"THAT EXPLAINS IT."

"Oh, I see! That explains it. But, by Jove, my dear man, she started early!"

Sowing and Reaping.

What we sow
Will surely grow,
Though the harvest may be slow.
It may be
We shall see
Fruitage in eternity
From some deed
Dropped, like seed,
For a soul that was in need!

Let us strive
While we live
Worthy things to do and give,
Striving still
With good will
Empty granaries to fill,
For what we sow
Will surely grow,
Though the harvest may be slow.

—Josephine Pollard.

The Sturdy Infant.

At a performance of "Dora" many years ago in a western city, when Mary Morrison made her exit to bring on her little Willie of four years she was shocked to find a lubberly boy of at least fourteen, and as he was the only Willie at hand on he must go, though he was well nigh as big as his mother. The Farmer Allan of the play, being equal to the emergency, instead of inquiring, "How old are you, my little man?" endeavored to remedy the matter by saying, "How old are you, my strapping boy?" But he failed, for the boy, who was instructed to any from "four to six," said it with such a coarse, sepulchral tone as to drive the good natured grandfather to exclaim: "Forty-six! You look it, my boy! You look it!"

Prudhomme-Munn Wedding.

This morning at St. Anne's church occurred the marriage of Miss Leah Prudhomme to Mr. Fred. Munn. The church was profusely arranged and decorated in large palms and spicy pink and white carnations. The bride was gowned in a fine serge travelling suit with a large tan hat to match. She entered with her father and stood under a large yellow bell in front of the altar. The groom followed with his father. Rev. Tapin performed the ceremony. During the impressive service, the Misses Rose Asselin, Eva LaPlant and Florence Duval sang several beautiful and appropriate songs. An elaborate wedding breakfast was served at the home of the groom's parents, on Stewart Avenue, to the immediate relatives. Among those from out of town who were present were Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Prudhomme, of Duluth, Mr. and Mrs. Wilfred Prudhomme of Duluth, Mr. and Mrs. Maurice Billadeau of Fisher, Miss Victoria Massie of Duluth and Mr. Villa Prudhomme of Duluth. The relatives who will arrive here this evening to attend the 6:30, 5 course wedding dinner at the home of the bride's parents Mr. and Mrs. A. Prudhomme, on Central Avenue, are Messrs. and Mesdames Joe Laurent, Leon Laurent, D. Champeau, and S. Yves of Red Lake Falls. At nine o'clock a reception will be given at Woodman Hall and Young Men's Social Club rooms in honor of the happy couple. Over two hundred invitations have been issued to this. The hall has been decorated thruout in yellow and white. Frappe and wafers will be served during the evening by the Misses Laura Munn and Linda Becker. Walker's full orchestra will furnish the music for the dancing which will follow and the older people will repair to the Young Men's Social club rooms, where they will play cards. The bride's reception gown is of old rose silk trimmed with silver braid with dainty suede shoes to match. The wedding gifts received were both numerous and beautiful. Mr. and Mrs. Munn will leave Wednesday for their future home at Devil's Lake, and congratulations from a host of Crookston friends will accompany them.—Crookston Times.

TO CONSIDER MANY DITCH PETITIONS

County Commissioners to Have a Very Busy Session Next Week.

Will Dispose of Seven Petitions In County Ditch Proceedings.

There will be a lively session of the board of county commissioners next week when the commissioners will meet on Wednesday, Feb. 23, to consider seven petitions in ditch proceedings. Three petitions ask that engineer and viewers be appointed to go over the proposed routes of ditches asked for in the petitions, and the other four petitions ask for the establishment and construction of ditches, the engineer and viewers having filed their reports with the county auditor. The ditches, if ordered constructed, will be located in reservation townships and will drain thousands of acres of low, wet land.

The people whose property will be affected by the proposed work if done have been very much interested and there is much controversy and not a little difference of opinion as to the proper location of the proposed ditches. It is expected that a large number of reservation farmers will be here next Wednesday to be heard for or against the establishment of the ditches as prayed for in the several petitions.

There is said to be no difference of opinion as to the necessity for the ditches but all are not agreed as to the courses the ditches shall take.

NEW BUILDINGS

Main Building and Dormitory at Agricultural School.

Supt. E. P. Harrington of the Crookston School of Agriculture this morning received the plans and specifications for the two new buildings to be erected this year, the $50,000 main building and the $25,000 ladies' dormitory. At least one and probably two sets of these plans will be left at the commercial club rooms for the convenience of of contractors who may desire to bid on the work.

The date when the contracts will be awarded has not been set definitely, but will be within a very few weeks and work will start on their erection as soon as possible so that both will be completed and ready for occupancy some time before the School of Agriculture opens next fall.

With equipment, these new buildings will represent an outlay of close to $100,000 this summer and indicates the importance of the work being done and the rapid growth of the school making additional room imperative.—Crookston Times.

JOHNSON'S MEN HERE

"Pussyfoot" Johnson's Lieutenants Were Here Last Week.

Two white men and a breed, members of the band that has been raiding saloons in the "Indian territory," were in town last Friday. They found an awfully dry place here for they were not able to "liquidate" at any of the places in town and no doubt the breed, if he didn't wear a boot leg, went out of town with parched lips and an unsatisfied desire for stimulants.

There is little occasion anyhow for the federal authorities to mix in affairs here, for an Indian in Red Lake Falls is now such a rare sight that the cigar sign decoy was a curiosity.

This is the time of the year fires happen. If you want to be safe get a fire insurance policy from Chas E. Boughton. Reliable company, small cost.

COUNTY EXHIBITS AT ST. PAUL MEETING

An Opportunity to Advertise Red Lake County is Provided.

Conservation and Agricultural Development Congress Next Month.

At the Minnesota Conservation and Agricultural Development Congress to be held at St. Paul March 16, 17, 18 and 19, 1910, there will be exhibits of agricultural products from nearly every part of the state. It will be a big advantage for Red Lake county to have an exhibit at the meeting. The real estate dealers have undertaken the preparation of such an exhibit and they ask the co-operation of the farmers. The land men have on hand plenty of good corn, but they desire small quantities of small grains—wheat of all varieties, winter and spring rye, oats, barley, flax, speltz, buckwheat, timothy seed, beans, peas. It would be well for anyone having especially good potatoes or other vegetables to bring in a small number of each. The space allowed for each county will necessarily be small, so that one quart of any of the grains and a small number of any variety of vegetables is all that need be brought in. It will be a profitable thing for the farmers to take an interest in this exhibit for the meeting is going to be a big one and a good exhibit will be a fine advertisement for Red Lake county.

Many subjects will be discussed at the four days meeting, among them state conservation and development, agricultural developement in Minnesota, state advertising and settlement of farm lands, agricultural and industrial education, pure food, public health and sanitation, good roads, forrestry and mines, drainage and waterpowers.

There will be exhibits from the public schools, from the agricultural schools and colleges and experimental farms. The immigration department, the state engineer, the U. S. department of agriculture and the department of the interior will also make exhibits.

Numbered among those from abroad who will deliver addresses at the congress are Richard A. Ballinger, Secretary of the Interior; George Otis Smith, United States Geographical Survey; J. C. Blanchard, statistician and lecturer, United States Reclamation Service; M. O. Eldridge, chief of the bureau of good roads, department of Agriculture; John Mitchell of the American Federation of Labor; Gifford Pinchot, former chief forester of the United States; Dr. W. J. McGee, bureau of soils, Department of Agriculture; Dr. Harvey W. Wiley, chief chemist of the United States. Other speakers will be those who know Minnesota best—those whose homes are within the borders of the North Star State, such men as James J. Hill of the Great Northern Railway; Governor A. O. Eberhart and others.

WILL SURVEY THE RED LAKE RIVER

Red River of the North and All Tributaries are to be Surveyed.

Will Determine Question of Regulating Flow of Red Lake River.

Congress has passed the rivers and harbors bill and in it there is a provision ordering a survey of the Red River of the North and all its headwaters for reservoir and power purposes. This means that it is to be determined whether or not the plan to erect a dam at the outlet of the Red lakes to regulate the flow of water in Red Lake river is a feasible one.

With the construction of so many ditches emptying into the Red Lake river the annual spring floods on the Red River of the North will be a greater than ever problem to solve. If a dam were erected at the outlet of the lakes to retain the water in the lakes until the volume of water resulting from the annual spring thaw is carried off, the flood problem will have been solved, it is thought. The Red lakes cover such a large area that it is believed a dam at the outlet that would raise the surface of the lakes only a few inches would retain enough water to regulate the flow of the river. The dam would regulate the flow to such extent that the many water powers on the river would be much more serviceable.

GORN AND CLOVER SHOW AT FORKS

Convention to be Held in Grand Forks Feb. 22-23—Poultry Show at Same Time.

The Red River Valley will hold its first annual Corn and Clover convention at Grand Forks February 22-23. Extensive arrangements are being made for the big meeting and Grand Forks will take care of its visitors with its accustomed hospitality. The meeting will be in charge of Superintendent Hoverstad. Other speakers will include Hon. O. C. Gregg, who for twenty four years was superintendent of farm institutes in Minnesota, President Worst of the agricultural college, Col. R. A. Wilkinson of Lake Elmo, Minn., who will speak on "Live Stock in the Northwest," Dean Holden of the Iowa agricultural college, a recognized authority on corn, from the state where they raise corn, Prof. J. H. Sheppard, who will speak on "Grain and Forage Problems," Prof. C. B. Waldron, who will discuss "Forestry and Fruit Growing" and other able speakers.

At the same time the Grand Forks Poultry and Pet Stock association will hold its second annual show. There are a large number of entries already for the exhibition and it will undoubtedly be one of the most successful ever held in the Northwest. Prize lists may be obtained from the secretary.

GOVERNOR ALLOWS SEABURY CLAIM

Claim Not Approved by Governor Johnson is Allowed.

Paul Pry's Gossipy Letter About Politics and Other Things.

[Special Correspondence to Red Lake Falls Gazette.]

St. Paul, Feb. 15.—It don't make any difference how perfect the system of checks and balances adopted by accountants, or how rigourous the laws designed to prevent grafting and extortion at the expense of the state, unless officials in high authority are imbued with a keen sense of their duty to safeguard the state's interest and the people's money there are bound to be leaks, big or little in proportion as such officials lack of vigilance and a proper appreciation of their responsibilities. There are always those ready to take an unfair advantage of the state in whose service they are employed. The safety of the state and the security of its funds lie in the selection of public servants zealous to protect the treasury against loot and against graft.

An Illegal Claim Paid.

A case in point has just come to light. There has been paid within the past week to Channing Seabury of St. Paul out of the treasury of the state the sum of $1,890 to a part of which at least, he had no legal claim. The claim is not altogether a new one. A bill for a part of it, that is to say, for $790, was submitted to Governor Johnson during his first term. Governor Johnson refused to approve the claim in its entirety on the ground that some items charged did not have the sanction of the law. He was willing however to approve the payment of such part of it as the law authorized. Seabury who had for years been paid similar bills without protest, would have all or nothing. The matter appears then to have dropped and nothing more was heard of it until after the accession of Governor Eberhart when Seabury submitted in addition to the claim for $790, which Governor Johnson refused to authorize, a bill for 120 days more at $5 a day or $600 making in all $1,390 mentioned above.

The Seabury Emoluments.

The services alleged to have been rendered by Seabury were in connection with the erection of the new state capitol. Seabury was the resident member of the capitol commission and its vice president. During the entire period of the erection of the capitol he was a wholesale grocer in the city of St. Paul and actively engaged in the direction of his private affairs. Prior to rendering the bill just paid he had drawn per diam from the state for 856 days work, or over $4,500. Only 138 of these 856 days were represented by meetings of the capitol commission. He had charged 414 days up to conferences. One hundred and six days are alleged to have been occupied in writing letters. He spent 41 days in signing papers, 41 in preparing and mailing reports, 35 on outside trips, four preparing for a reception to the legislature, 7 inspecting the building and grounds, 1 in laying the cornerstone and 75 are under the somewhat indefinite head of "miscellaneous."

Why Johnson Objected.

Coming to this last bill the itemized account does not appear to be available for public inspection. It is known however, to include $5 for attending and assisting in the removal of the battle flags of Minnesota regiments from the old capitol to the new. The incidents in connection with this removal are still remembered in St. Paul; how battle-scarred veterans, tottering under the weight of years, came from all parts of the state at their own expense to form the guard of honor which for probably the last time followed the shot riven standards behind which the heroes of honored Minnesota regiments had marched to victory or which they protected in defeat. Channing Seabury went along, took part in the ceremony, and charged up $5 to the "erection of the capitol." For every day of January, 1905, except Sundays, Seabury also made a charge against the building of the marble palace. The legislature was in session in the new capitol at that time. It was engaged very busily in a bill to perpetuate the state capitol commission. Seabury spent a good deal of the days the legislature was in session, and as usual there was a good many when it wasn't in session, in the committee

JURY SAID NOT GUILTY.

Alleged Karlstad Bank Robber Acquitted.

Ed. LeClaire, one of three men arrested for robbing the Karlstad bank Aug. 18, when the robbers got away with about $1,300, was acquitted last Friday. The trial was conducted at Hallock.

Four men did the job at Karlstad, and were observed by a woman but 23 feet distant from the bank, who was awakened by the explosion and came to the door. The robbers ordered her to go back into the house and keep quiet or they would quiet her. She obeyed but watched through her window, taking in the entire operation.

Four men were seen in Thief River Falls three days before the robbery who answered the description of three of the men arrested and two days after the robbery were seen by section men between St. Hilaire and Wylie and they testified that the three men tried answered the description of the men on trial.

Williams, one of the three men arrested, was convicted and was given a ten year sentence by Judge Grindeland. Joe. Barres, the third man, was discharged. He proved an alibi. The jury in the LeClaire trial was out only a few minutes.

MRS. LEVI MILLER.

Passed Away at Family Home Yesterday Afternoon.

Mrs. Levi Miller died yesterday afternoon at one o'clock at the family home in this city after an illness of several months. Mrs. Miller had been in failing health since last August.

Mrs. Miller was 74 years old in June, 1909. She was born at Fall River, Mass. Thirty-one years ago she came west with her husband and they settled on a farm in Red Lake county and they had resided there and at the family home in this city ever since.

Deceased is survived by her husband and four sons and two daughters. The sons are Joseph and Samuel of this city and Napoleon of Grand Rapids and Peter who has spent the past two and a half years in Idaho. Both of the boys who live away had been home for several days before their mother's death. The daughters are Mrs. Joseph Patnode and Mrs. B. Westover both of Harlem, Idaho.

Funeral services will be conducted at St. Joseph's church, of which deceased was a member, at 10:30 o'clock Friday morning.

Will Build Ice Break.

Members of the board of county commissioners drove out to Louisville yesterday to look at the Red Lake river and the bridge spanning the river at that place that they might intelligently consider a request that has been made for an ice break. It is feared that the bridge may go out in the spring if something is not done to break up the ice. The commissioners decided that it would be a wise thing to contract an ice break and an appropriation will be made for that purpose.

SIX AMENDMENTS TO BE VOTED UPON

Constitutional Amendments to be Submitted to Voters of the State.

Six constitutional amendments will be submitted to the voters at the general election next November. Attorney General Simpson has given Secretary of State Julius Schmahl an opinion, as required by law, telling what amendments are to be submitted and the purport of each, so that the Secretary of State can have the proper ballots prepared. The following are the amendments which will be submitted:

Changing the good roads provision so that the state can pay half instead of only one-third the cost of a state road.

Repealing the requirement that the reports of the state treasurer be bound in the same volume as the session laws.

Permitting the state to conduct a hail and tornado insurance.

Permitting the legislature to make a reapportionment at any session following a census.

Providing a one-fifteenth mill tax for reforestation.

Permitting the legislature to exempt timber lands from taxation.

Had Narrow Escape.

Three women and a baby had a narrow escape from being burned to death in a fire at Fosston last Friday morning. A house belonging to Jos. Lenes caught on fire at 3 o'clock in the morning from an overheated stove. The women and baby slept in rooms adjoining the one in which the fire originated and were not aware of their danger until an exploding kerosene can awakened them. It is believed that had it not been for the explosion the four people would have perished. The room in which the stove was located was enveloped in flames when the fire was discovered and the women were compelled to go out through the windows.

Governor Eberhart cannot afford many more mistakes like the Seabury graft incident.

The price of diamonds is advancing. It is understood that this is due to the fact that so many farmers are refusing to buy any but diamond-studded automobiles.

Thirty bankers convicted of crime in connection with their business are in the Leavenworth prison. The "men higher up" in the financial world who have offended the laws have not escaped the penalty to the extent they expected.

"No one should expect hens to lay 15 cent eggs or cows to produce 20 cent butter on $200 an acre land," says the Keokuk Gate City. "The increase in the price of farm lands is in part responsible for the greater cost of some of the necessaries of life."

From the time of the passage of the homestead law up to June 30, 1909, there had been patented to settlers under its provisions 115,124,295 acres of land. In the same period the land grants to railroads by the federal government amounted to 113,879,674 acres. What the railroads realized from these lands it is, of course, impossible to say. At $5 an acre they would bring $569,398,370.

According to the Salina Journal an Italian working on a road in western Kansas was warned to beware of the rattlesnakes, but was told that they always rattled as a warning before they bit. The dago accidently sat down on a cactus, and ran to the boss howling, "Rattlesnaka bita ma lega: no ringa da bella."

According to a recent poll taken by the Chicago Tribune a large majority of the Republican editors of the middle west favor Roosevelt for president as against Taft, and practically all of them are opposed to the re election of Cannon. The vote would indicate that a revolt is brewing within the Republican party, and there is little evidence that the Aldrich bill is believed to be "the best ever," notwithstanding the president's latest declaration to that effect.

Columbia (Mo.,) has a law against the exposing of meat in front of stores. In spite of the law some such displays are made, and the other day a dog picked up two and a half feet of bologna sausage and proceeded to eat a foot of it before the rest was rescued by a clerk and taken back into the store. Says the official paper of the school of journalism: "Persons who saw the occurrance wonder what was done with the remaining portion." Isn't this yellow journalism?

One of the amendments to be voted on this fall is to permit the state to conduct a hail and tornado insurance. Why not life and fire insurance as well? The latter would save to the people of the state millions of dollars that are now absorbed by outside and foreign corporations, says the Red Wing Free Press. The former would do nothing of the kind, it would be a mere disbursing process on the part of the state without any particular gain to anybody and would ultimately be the means of placing burdens where they don't belong.

Superintendent Galerneault of the state banking department calls attention to the fact, which he deplores, that twin city capitalists are reaching out and furnishing capital for and organizing country banks. He regards the tendency as unfortunate "as it will to a great extent help to divert the true purpose and intent of a country bank, namely, the receiving of commercial and savings deposits of the community to be cared for and in part carefully loaned to the borrowing public of the same community from which it was received. Instead, these holding companies send this money to the larger cities to take up their commercial paper there, to the exclusion of local borrowers."

Bob Dunn wants the governor to call a special session of the legislature to submit a good road constitutional amendment at the coming election. His purpose is praiseworthy, says the Hutchinson Leader, whether the special session is necessary or not. Now comes Speaker Rockne of the house and approves the session for the reason, he says, that it will tend to harmonize the Republican party. Isn't there some one who wants to rehabilitate the populist party at the expense of the tax payers? It might take a constitutional convention to galvanize the old Democratic party, but if "party solidarity" is so essential to the people's happiness, why discriminate as to parties? Give them all a chance.

The Republican press is whispering mysteriously. Now, for instance, in the appended item from the St. Peter Free Press, it is not easy to fathom the writer's meaning. Does Brother Miller infer that John Lind can beat Governor Eberhart and that there is some man in the Republican ranks that Lind can't beat? We pause for a diagram:

"John Lind is still talked of as a gubernatorial probability and the impression prevails that in the end he will become the nominee of the party. Should this come to pass the Republicans will know that they have opposition. John is an effective speaker and as well versed in the art of campaigning as any one on the other side. Since the Republican state convention probably convenes first this contingency should receive due consideration."

There has been some mighty interestin' readin' the last few days. Several high toned financiers have drawn surprises ranging from five to fifteen years in federal prison. The former state treasurer of Michigan who placed $680,000 public money in his private bank—and failed—is "number 9012." If the game keeps up there may be a possibility that the high-flyers in finance will get some respect for law; for other people's property. These sentences are not in proportion to the enormity of the offense; a hungry man steals a loaf of bread and gets ten years—the "financier" steals a half million, fights it out in court because he has the price, gets a light sentence and within thirty days after "influential friends" get busy and circulate a petition for his release. In the sifting it is shown that "It's no disgrace to be poor, but it's mighty unhandy."

WHY HE FLAGGED IT.

Hibbing Tribune: Here are some items charged in the Seabury capitol bill at $5 per day:

"June 12—Conference with committee on flag day.
"June 13—Preparing a flag day.
"June 14—Attending flag day.
"June 24—Conference with committee as to flag day.
"June 26—Conference with committee as to flag day by correspondence."

No wonder Governor Johnson flagged the bill.

A Model.

Mr. Jones came home at an unseemly hour the other night and was surprised to see Mrs. Jones sitting up for him below stairs, with no other light than that of the gas lamp, which faced the door, to keep her company.

"M-M-Marie," he said huskily, "y-you shouldn't sit up a'nite when I'm out on business."

As Mrs. Jones did not answer him, he continued in an alarmed voice:

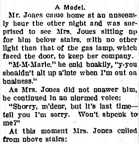
"Shorry, m'dear, but it's last time—tell you I'm sorry. Won't speak to me?"

At this moment Mrs. Jones called from above stairs:

"Mr. Jones, who are you talking to at this hour of the night?"

"Thash what I'd like to know m-m-myself," stammered Jones.

Mrs. Jones hastened downstairs, lamp in hand. When she saw the situation she laughed in spite of being very angry.



"IT'S THE MODEL," SHE SAID.

"It's the model," she said—"the model I bought today to fit my dresses on."

"Yes, thash so," said Jones tipsily. "Model woman—didn't talk back—make some fellow good wife."

GOVERNOR ALLOWS SEABURY CLAIM

rooms and conferring with members of the legislature, just as John Furlong did at its last session, but John was modest. He only asked $100 a month for lobbying for the state fair. Seabury charged up to $5 a day for lobbying for a bill to which would make it possible to hold down his job for two years more. In justice to Mr. Seabury, however, it must be said that he didn't state it quite that way in his bill. He claimed to be absorbed in hearing numerous applications for position. In the 26 days two men got jobs. Six of the days Mr. Seabury claimed to be engaged in "correspondence."

Simpson Gets From Under.

Evidently even Governor Eberhart hesitated about allowing the bill which was subsequently paid because he approved it. When the claim was submitted to him he referred it to the attorney general. This was on the 27th of December. Simpson is a pretty wise bird. He wasn't going around pecking at dynamite. He evidently examined the bill and the items it contained with a good deal of care. When he got good and ready—on Feb. 7th—he wrote the governor a long and quite interesting letter about it—telling him in substance that he washed his hands of the whole business. In fact he declined to commit himself in any way, except to tell the governor that the charge for the 26 days to which I have alluded was clearly illegal. I quote Mr. Simpson's own words:

"For any services rendered by him (Seabury) and relating to the hiring of employees between the date of the adoption of the resolution by the board in 1904 (Dec. 6) and the passage of the act in 1905, unless the same were necessary to the erection of the building, he is entitled to no renumeration whatever, there being no law to authorize the same."

Putting it up to the Governor.

As to the other items the attorney-general declined to express an opinion. He told the governor quite plainly that if he wanted to allow the bill he would have to take the responsibility on his own shoulders. "It is my opinion," said he, "that it is your duty to ascertain the number of days service actually rendered by this claimant. In other words the same is a question of fact." The governor appears then to have taken the bull by the horns and to have approved the bill without farther inquiry or investigation. At all events Seabury got his money the next day or the day after.

A Ready Made Decision.

There is a curious incident in connection with the opinion received from the attorney general's office. When the Seabury bill was submitted to Auditor Iverson, in order that he might draw up a warrant for the amount, it was accompanied by another opinion purporting to have been issued from the legal department of the state and signed "——, attorney general." It gave the Seabury bill a blanket endorsement and pictured Seabury himself as a disinterested and self-sacrificing patriot. "The State of Minnesota," it said, "will never know and can never pay Mr. Seabury the self-sacrificing, capable and efficient services rendered by him in the construction of the new capitol." Where this opinion came from or who wrote it is at this writing as great a mystery as the identity of the man with the iron mask or the authorship of the letters of Junius. The most probable theory is that it was written by some interested party or for him with the design of inducing the attorney general to sign it; but then Simpson says he never saw it, and there you are.

Johnson Attacked.

Evidently the governor had no sooner approved the Seabury bill and thus insured its payment than he began to realize the weakness of his position and wonder how in the world he was going to justify the illegal disposition of the state's money he had authorized. In the panic into which the publicity of the accident threw him he appears to have completely lost his head and was goaded to the indiscretion of making an attack on Governor Johnson. He is reported in both the St. Paul and Minneapolis papers to have said, and I have no doubt the interview was authorized, that he considered the Seabury claim "a reasonable charge," and that "it was held up in the first instance because the Democratic administration could not get the patronage which the capitol commission controlled." As the bill was held up by Governor Johnson personally this amounts to a charge that he refused to pay a just claim in order to revenge himself on his political opponents. It is doubtful if even Governor Eberhart himself believes this, and it is not surprising that Governor Johnson's friends resent the imputation.

Young Turns Down the Claim.

The position taken by Governor Eberhart is more untenable because of the decision above quoted by Attorney General Simpson which clearly intimates that for a part at least of the Seabury claim there is no legal warrant. Moreover Governor Johnson's refusal to allow it in full was predicted upon a decision given by Attorney General Young, to which there are credible witnesses although it was not reduced to writing, to the effect that there was no law to warrant the payment to Seabury of the total amount of the charges in his bill. It is too much to expect the public to believe that Attorney General Young could be induced to misinterpret the law in order to secure patronage for a Democratic executive, or to furnish Governor Johnson an excuse for refusing to pay a Republican officeholder emoluments which he was entitled to by law.

Seabury's Easy Remedy.

There is still another view to take of the Seabury claim. There may be circumstances under which the state may incur obligations for which the law does not make proper provision. The remedy lies, and is frequently resorted to, in an appeal to the legislature. There probably never has been a session of the legislature, certainly there never has been one in recent years, in which provision has not been made for the liquidation of such claims. The people's representatives never hesitate to allow a claim that has merit and to make an appropriation for it. Since Governor Johnson refuses to allow the Seabury claim we have had at least two legislatures whose majority was overwhelmingly Republican. They would surely not be willing to see a Republican suffer partisan injustice at the hands of a Democratic governor. If the Seabury claim had merit, why was not the legislature appealed to to pay it? Or if it was appealed to why did it not make provision for its payment? The inference is plain. Seabury's claim was of such a character that he hesitated to submit it to a committee of the people's representatives of his own political faith.

S.S.S. CURES OLD BLOOD TROUBLES

Contagious Blood Poison is at the bottom of a great many old blood troubles. The disease may have been contracted years ago and some treatment used that removed the outward symptoms and shut the virus up in the system to slumber in the blood, but it only awaited a favorable opportunity to break out in some form again.

Certain forms of catarrhal troubles, especially where the bones are affected, scrofulous affections, non-healing sores, ulcerated membranes, etc., are due to this specific poison. Perhaps many who are afflicted in this way are ignorant of the fact that the seeds of this mighty poison are still hidden in the blood. Like the deadly serpent, which is dangerous as long as the faintest spark of life is left to enable it to sink its poisonous fangs, this powerful disease will corrupt and defile while the least particle of its insidious virus remains in the blood.

The best time to get rid of Contagious Blood Poison is when the disease is first contracted, and before its virus so penetrates the blood as to cause ulcerated mouth and throat, copper-colored spots, falling hair, etc. Then of course the victim is saved much humiliation and suffering; but even after the poison has become established in the system it can be removed and a cure effected if the blood be thoroughly purified with S. S. S.

S. S. S. is the greatest of all blood purifiers. It possesses penetrating powers that enable it to go down into the blood, and remove the last trace of blood poison. It cures all blood troubles simply and solely because it removes the cause from the circulation. Not only does S. S. S. cure Contagious Blood Poison when first contracted, but reaches it in any of its stages, even where the trouble has been inherited. S. S. S. is made entirely of roots, herbs and barks, and does not contain the slightest trace of mineral in any form. You can get rid of your old blood trouble if you will take S. S. S. and allow it to purify the blood. Book on the blood and any medical advice free.

A PERFECT CURE.

Some eight years ago I was inoculated with poison by a nurse who infected my babe with blood taint. I was covered with sores and ulcers from head to foot. No language can express my feelings of woe during these long years. I was advised by friends who had seen wonderful cures made by it, to try S.S.S. We got some and I improved from the start, and a complete and perfect cure was the result. S.S.S. is the only blood remedy which reaches desperate cases of old blood troubles.

For Sprains

Sloan's Liniment is the best remedy for sprains and bruises.

It quiets the pain at once, and can be applied to the tenderest part without hurting because it doesn't need to be rubbed—all you have to do is to lay it on lightly. It is a powerful preparation and penetrates instantly—relieves any inflammation and congestion, and reduces the swelling.

Here's the Proof.

Mr. L. Roland, Bishop of Scranton, Pa., says:—"On the 7th of this present month, as I was leaving the building at noon for lunch, I slipped and fell, spraining my wrist. I returned in the afternoon, and at four o'clock I could not hold a pencil in my hand. I returned home later and purchased a bottle of and used it five or six times before I went to bed, and the next day I was able to go to work and use my hand as usual."

Sloan's Liniment is an excellent antiseptic and germ killer—heals cuts, burns, wounds and contusions, and will draw the poison from sting of poisonous insects.

RAW ECZEMA ON HANDS

"I had eczema on my hands for ten years. I had three good doctors but none of them did any good. I then used one box of Cuticura Ointment and three bottles of Cuticura Resolvent and was completely cured. My hands were raw all over, inside and out, and the eczema was spreading all over my body and limbs. Before I had used one bottle, together with the Cuticura Ointment, my sores were nearly healed over, and by the time I had used the third bottle, I was entirely well. To any one who has any skin or blood disease I would honestly advise them to fool with nothing else, but to get Cuticura and get well. My hands have never given me the least bit of trouble up to now.

"My daughter's hands this summer became perfectly raw with eczema. She could get nothing that would do them any good until she tried Cuticura. She used Cuticura Resolvent and Cuticura Ointment and in two weeks they were entirely cured. I have used Cuticura for other members of my family and it always proved successful. Mrs. M. E. Falin, Spears Ferry, Va., Oct. 19, 1909."

On Ghosts.

James H Hyslop, the brilliant psychologist, narrated, during a discussion of the Paladin case in New York, an original old lady's opinion of ghosts.

"Ghosts!" exclaimed the old lady, scornfully. "I don't take any stock in them. If you die and go to the good place it isn't likely that you'd want to waddle back to this poor vale of trouble, while if you go to the bad place you'll be kept there."

Farm School Letter

Interesting Information on Minnesota Agriculture by Our Special Correspondent.

Community Breeding—What Is It?

The question of community Breeding is agitating breeders in some parts of the state especially, and ought to be discussed among the farmers generally. One gentleman greatly interested in this line of breeding writes the department of Agriculture at the University Farm in substance as follows:

"By Community Breeding we mean simply the getting together of farmers, deciding upon some breed to raise, then buying and using bulls in partnership. This is neither an experiment nor some foolish idea, but it has been worked out in foreign countries as well as in parts of the United States."

He cites certain counties in Wisconsin where the farmers have made wonderful records as a result of this method of breeding, and gives instances where grades are selling at high figures, and says that pure breeds are in demand at fabulous prices, drawing the deduction that if this can be done in one locality it can be done everywhere that the breeders are willing to adopt the method.

The writer argues rightly when he says that increased production is the real goal to be striven for, on the ground that the man who can make better stock grow where an inferior quality grew before is a benefactor to mankind.

With great practical knowledge he says that "You may not have grade cows for sale for several years, because you will want the heifers to grow up, to have their milk tested, etc., and cull out the poor stock, leaving only the best for future breeding. The bull calves, he says, should not be kept for breeding, but should be sold for veal. Only the best pure bred bulls from record producing ancestors should be used. The scales and tester should then be used to determine the value of their daughters, since not every bull of any strain of cattle possesses the required merit, and the only measure of his merit is the record of his offspring.

Thus, says the correspondent, a group of farmers, when working cooperatively with other groups, can use a sire until his usefulness to them is exhausted owing to his near relationship to the young females of the herd, when he can be exchanged with another group having a similar sire, and his valuable qualities preserved so long as he is fit for service, thus avoiding untried sires and reducing individual expense.

Then, to sum up, the chief thing is to select a breed of stock, no matter whether cattle, hogs, sheep or horses, stick to the breed selected and breed UP with intelligent purpose.

Good and Bad Breeding.

An interesting feature of the recent meeting of the Stockbreeders' Association at University Farm was the lecture by Prof. Grout, on the subject of selecting dairy stock. Several animals were in the ring, among which were some Guernseys, whose records of butter were stated by the professor. The best and poorest dairy cows on the farm were in evidence. The best cow, with a record of 405 pounds of butter last year, was shown, together with her daughter, whose record was only one hundred and ten pounds during the same period. The mother's average for five years past has been 325 pounds yearly, but owing to her bad habit of milking herself it is not definitely known what her record might be, though Prof. Grout thinks it would easily reach to over five hundred pounds if she were crowded. The heifer is kept as an object lesson to show the value of breeding. One would naturally think that such a mother would give great value to the offspring, and produce a good record-maker. The sire of the daughter, while having good points, failed to get a calf of value, and was disposed of as soon as his failure was discovered. In this case the scales and tester were applied to the heifer's milk, with unsatisfactory results, proving that only through the daughters can the value of the sire be determined. So it is maintained that when a sire shows good results he should be kept in the community so long as it is possible to avoid inbreeding. Then he can be sent to some other community and his value be preserved until his service is no longer valuable.

Rural School Lectures.

Splendid reports continue to come from the rural school workers under the auspices of the Division of Agricultural Extension. A feature of the work at Glencoe was Saturday afternoon lectures in a building different from the high school, where many farmers attended. On one Saturday afternoon, Prof. Olson lectured on swine and on the next Saturday afternoon Prof. Haecker talked on dairying. Evenings during the time were devoted to work in the rural school houses, where several districts would join at a designated school house and listen to Prof. Olson on swine, and Prof. Schmidt, who is employed in the Glencoe high school as instructor in agriculture, talked on corn raising. The teachers in the several schools where these evening sessions were held provided programs aside from the lectures, so that all might be interested.

NEW FARM SCHOOL DEAN.

Prof. Albert Woods.

Dean Woods reported for duty on February 1st at the College of Agriculture.

Milk Testing At Annandale.

The Dairy Division of the Agricultural Extension Department has established a milk testing station at Annandale, Wright county, where a group of 19 farmers have agreed to test their milk for one year. The testing will be done at the Albion Creamery, at Annandale, and the record kept at the dairy department of the University Farm. The Farm has sold two Jersey sires to the Annandale people and loaned one bull to them. Co-operative breeding is the rule among those people. There are a number of Jersey herds around Annandale and the experiment is going to be tried with thoroughness. This is the only practical way of developing the best dairy stock, and the farmers are entitled to encouragement in their effort to advance the growing dairy industry of Minnesota.

FARM SCHOOL NOTES.

Dean Olson bade the Agricultural College good-bye on the 31st of January.

Mrs. Olson, of Atwater, one of the ladies so much interested in the high school short courses, paid a visit to the University Farm and gave enthusiastic reports of the recent short course in her city and at Howard Lake.

A Holstein cow was recently brought to the Experiment Station from Duluth and was on exhibition to the Stock Breeders' Association a short time ago. She is regarded as one of the most valuable additions recently made to the Station herd.

Mrs. Blair, of the department of domestic art and home decoration, at the School of Agriculture, has just received from Gov. Eberhart a commission as vice-president at large of the First Minnesota Conservation and Development Congress, to be held in St. Paul, on March 16th to 19th, inclusive.

W. C. Palmer, a graduate of the Minnesota College of Agriculture, and for some time dean of the Winona School of Agriculture, was at the University Farm a day or two recently. He is now engaged in the agricultural extension and Farmers' Institute work in the North Dakota agricultural department.

William Schwager, of Lake Park, Iowa, who was attending the farmers' short course at University Farm, was taken sick with appendicitis and removed to a hospital in Minneapolis, where an operation was performed. He died a day or two after the operation. The short course people raised a purse of about twenty dollars and sent to the young man's father, with which to procure flowers for the funeral.

The Dairy Division at the University Farm has just bought a Holstein bull through F. W. Schilling, of Northfield, which is regarded as one of the best animals of his kind in the state, considering pedigree and conformation. He won first prize at the New York State Fair in 1909, second at the Great Eastern Fair at Brockton, Mass., and second at National Dairy Show in a class of fourteen, and since coming to the Farm he has improved greatly. He is a valuable acquisition to the state.

It is certainly to be hoped that the farmers of Minnesota will appreciate the efforts the Dairy Division of the Experiment Station at St. Anthony Park is making in the interest of co-operative breeding. The station is in receipt of a valuable Jersey bull from Trenton, Kentucky, known as Brook Hill Fern. His sire was sold in Kentucky for $5,000, and his dam sold at auction for $530 in 1906. The introduction of this blood into the herd will put the Experiment Station at the top of the list of Jersey herds in Minnesota. This bull is a grandson of the famous cow, Brook Hill Rose. She was first prize and champion winner of the Island of Jersey, and said to be the most famous cow ever raised on the Island, giving 28 quarts of milk daily.

"LORD OF THE SEA"

Sir Arthur Knyvet Wilson Commands Great Britain's Navy.

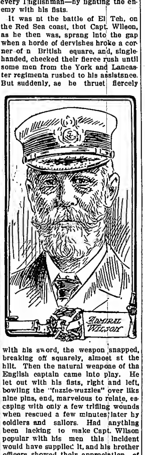
His Appointment Ends the Fisher-Beresford Feud—Has Been in Active Service More Than Half a Century.

London.—When Sir John Fisher retired from the office of first sea lord of the British navy and was succeeded by Admiral Sir Arthur Knyvet Wilson, January 25, the public of England felt not only that the direction of the greatest sea navy in the world continued in able hands, but it probably also heaved a great sigh of relief at the end of the controversies which have attended the administration of "Jackey" Fisher. For the retiring first sea lord has had a feud of the first magnitude with Lord Charles Beresford, and the navy's discipline has suffered in consequence.

Admiral Sir Arthur Knyvet Wilson does not engage in feuds. Known as "the silent admiral" and as "England's best sailor," he is exceedingly popular in the navy, although a hard disciplinarian, because of his recognized ability. Of all the admirals in the world, he is considered by the British authorities the ablest expert on gunnery, strategy and tactics, and has invented a number of devices of value to naval vessels.

For more than half a century the coming first sea lord has been in active service. As a midshipman 12 years old he first heard the thundering broadsides of a naval battle in the Crimean war, off Sebastopol. In 1854 he took part in the storming of the Taku forts in China. In 1882 he served in the Sudan campaign, where he won that simple decoration of bronze with its significant legend, "For Valor"—the Victoria cross—which is bestowed only for conspicuous acts of bravery in the presence of the enemy, and is more highly prized than any other reward that can come to the British soldier or sailor. Moreover, he earned it by an act that doubtless endeared him to every Englishman—by fighting the enemy with his fists.

It was at the battle of El Teb, on the Red Sea coast, that Capt. Wilson, as he then was, sprang into the gap when a horde of dervishes broke a corner of a British square, and, single-handed, checked their fierce rush until some men from the York and Lancaster regiments rushed to his assistance. But suddenly, as he thrust fiercely with his sword, the weapon snapped, breaking off squarely, almost at the hilt. Then the natural weapons of the English captain came into play. He let out with his fists, right and left, bowling the "fuzzie-wuzzies" over like nine pins, and, marvelous to relate, escaping with only a few trifling wounds when rescued a few minutes later by soldiers and sailors. Had anything been lacking to make Capt. Wilson popular with his men this incident would have supplied it, and his brother officers showed their appreciation of his act by presenting him with a superb new sword, while from Queen Victoria came the coveted cross of bronze.



Sir Arthur was made a knight commander of the Bath in 1902, and three years later he was made a knight of the Grand Cross, Royal Victorian Order, first class. In 1906 he received still further distinction in the Grand Order of the Bath, military order.

The list of his successive offices is long. He became captain in 1880, rear admiral in 1895, vice-admiral in 1901, was aid de camp to the queen from 1892 to 1895, lord commissioner of the admiralty and comptroller of the navy from 1897 to 1901, commander of the channel squadron from 1901 to 1903, commander-in-chief of the home and channel fleets from 1903 to 1907 and admiral of the fleet in 1907.

"The king added three super-Dreadnoughts to the navy to-day," said one enthusiastic admirer of Sir Arthur when the news that the admiral would succeed Sir John Fisher was announced. This remark tells the feeling of the new first sea lord's intimates, and the public of Britain has received the news of his appointment with great satisfaction.

Style in Ailments.

"Well, here I am," announced the fashionable physician in his breezy way. "And now what do you think is the matter with you?" "Doctor, I hardly know," murmured the fashionable patient, "What is new?"

This Contractor got results.

He knew how to feed his men.

Some years ago a contractor building a railroad in a warm climate was troubled a great deal by sickness among the laborers.

He turned his attention at once to their food and found that they were getting full rations of meat and were drinking water from a stream near by.

He issued orders to cut down the amount of meat and to increase greatly the quantity of Quaker Oats fed to the men.

He also boiled Quaker Oats and mixed the thin oatmeal water with their drinking water.

Almost instantly all signs of stomach disorders passed and his men showed a decided improvement in strength and spirits.

This contractor had experience that taught him the great value of good oatmeal. 53

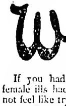
Attention Sick Women

If you had positive proof that a certain remedy for female ills had made many remarkable cures, would you not feel like trying it?

If during the last thirty years we have not succeeded in convincing every fair-minded woman that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has cured thousands and thousands of women of the ills peculiar to their sex, then we long for an opportunity to do so by direct correspondence. Meanwhile read the following letters which we guarantee to be genuine and truthful.

Hudson, Ohio.—"I suffered for a long time from a weakness, inflammation, dreadful pains each month and suppression. I had been doctoring and receiving only temporary relief, when a friend advised me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I did so, and wrote to you for advice. I have faithfully followed your directions and now, after taking only five bottles of the Vegetable Compound, I have every reason to believe I am a well woman. I give you full permission to use my testimonial." —Mrs. Lena Carmocino, Hudson, Ohio. R. F. D. No. 7.

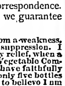


St. Regis Falls, N. Y.—"Two years ago I was so bad that I had to take to my bed every month, and it would last from two to three weeks. I wrote to you for advice and took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound in dry form. I am happy to say that I am cured, thanks to your medicine and good advice. You may use my letter for the good of others." —Mrs. J. H. Breyere, St. Regis Falls, N. Y.

There is absolutely no doubt about the ability of this grand old remedy, made from the roots and herbs of our fields, to cure female diseases. We possess volumes of proof of this fact, enough to convince the most skeptical.

For 30 years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been the standard remedy for female ills. No sick woman does justice to herself who will not try this famous medicine. Made exclusively from roots and herbs, and has thousands of cures to its credit.

Mrs. Pinkham invites all sick women to write her for advice. She has guided thousands to health free of charge. Address Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass.



Insomnia

"I have been using Cascarets for Insomnia, with which I have been afflicted for twenty years, and I can say that Cascarets have given me more relief than any other remedy I have ever tried. I shall certainly recommend them to my friends as being all that they are represented."

Worm Turns at Last

It was the old story. The one we have all seen repeated so many, many times. Two young women entered the car together and the tired-looking man arose and proffered his seat. Then, while he groped unsteadily for a strap, the usual conversation ensued:

"Oh, thank you, sir."

"Thank you so much."

"Sit down, dear."

"No, you sit down."

"I insist, dear; I'm not a bit tired."

"Neither am I, and I'd just as soon stand."

"Go ahead, dear, and take it."

"No, no, you take it. I—"

And then the tired man did what so many have wanted to see done so many, many times. He took it himself.

As he sank wearily but calmly back in his seat the smiles of mutual baner-

Not Fit to Be Minister.

When the announcement was made that a certain distinguished citizen had been appointed to join the nation's diplomatic forces and assume an important foreign portfolio, the matter was naturally discussed with a great deal of interest among his acquaintances.

One day the subject came up in a company among which was one old fellow who had known the appointee for upward of forty years.

"What do you say he has been appointed to?" the old fellow asked. "Why," answered one, "he has been appointed to be minister in one of the largest cities of Europe."

"Well, that's the most ridiculous thing I ever heard of," snorted the friend of the new diplomatist. "He's a nice feller, all right, but he ain't fit to be minister nowhere. Why, durn it, he don't even know the Lord's prayer."

The Rule of Three.

A man who had been timidly thinking about matrimony for several years and who had finally goaded himself to the point of becoming engaged took his seat at his desk in a rather thoughtful mood the other morning. Finally he turned to the man at the next desk and said:

"I say, old man, can you tell me what is meant by the rule of three? My girl asked me about it last night. Never heard of it before."

"Well," said the man at the next desk, who was adorned with a frayed collar and an incipient bald spot on his head, "if you can wait till you're married and live with your wife, her ancient maiden sister and their mother you will know the rule of three all right."

The Dean's Grace.

A famous dean was once at dinner when, just as the cloth was removed, the subject of discourse happened to be that of extraordinary mortality among lawyers. "We have lost," said a gentleman, "not fewer than six eminent barristers in as many months." The dean, who was quite deaf, rose as his friend finished his remarks and gave the company grace. "For this and every other mercy make us truly thankful."

Left Out In the Heat.

There was once a man who never attended church, thinking that his wife's regular attendance made up for his own omission. Well, the man died and duly appeared before St. Peter at the gate of paradise.

"Who are you?" the saint asked curtly.

"Why, St. Peter, I am John S. Nicholson of Chicago. I thought, of course, you knew me."

"No; I don't know you," said the saint.

"But, St. Peter, I am Mrs. Nicholson's husband—the charitable Mrs. Nicholson, don't you know, who went regularly to church and was so kind to the poor."

"Why didn't you do like her?" said the saint.

"Well, St. Peter, I was always so worn out from business on Sunday that I had to play golf to avoid getting neuritis, and, anyhow, I understood that if Mrs. Nicholson went to church regularly it would do for both of us."

"Your wife," said the saint, "was a true, faithful Christian. She came to these gates four years ago, and she went in—for both of you."

THE LATE SIDNEY M. OWEN

SIDNEY M. OWEN

FAMOUS FARMER, EDITOR AND POLITICAL LEADER GOES QUIETLY TO REST.

DEATH DUE TO MALARIA

Arduous Campaign For the Governorship On the Populist In 1894 Weakened Him.

Minneapolis.—Sidney M. Owen, soldier, editor, politician and good citizen is dead after an illness of some weeks.

About a year ago Mr. Owen contracted malaria while on a pleasure trip in Florida, and he had never fully recovered. A weakness of the heart developed. It was aggravated by a severe cough which caused him gradually to grow weaker.

Mr. Owen is believed by many to have been the victim of the strenuous campaign he waged in 1894, when he unsuccessfully championed the People's party of the state against the Republican and Democratic forces for the governorship. The earnest fight he waged left him exhausted and weakened.

Sidney M. Owen was born in Ohio, August 11, 1838, and he received the common school education of that time and completed his studies at Oberlin university. In 1860 he married Helen A. Feagler, who survives him. He served as first lieutenant in the Fifty-fifth Ohio regiment during the civil war.

In 1885, the year after his brother, Horatio R. Owen, founded the Farm Stock and Home, he came to Minneapolis and assumed editorial charge of the publication.

His editorial policy and convictions were such that it gave him the support of the insurgents of that time as typified in the Farmers' Alliance and forced him unwillingly into the state campaign in 1890. He took the field as their candidate for governor, but without a party organization to back him and lacking newspaper support, he was not successful. However, he made an excellent run, polling more than 58,000 votes and made a name for himself as a political leader.

In 1894 he again appeared as candidate for governor on the Populist ticket. The Democratic party stood ready to nominate him and to make the campaign on the basis of fusion. Mr. Owen declined the indorsement of the democracy, though he might have been elected.

Mr. Owen will best be remembered for his connection with the development of agricultural education in Minnesota. He worked to prevent the separation of the farm school from the university, thereby alienating his friends of the Farmers' Alliance, as that organization strenuously backed the separation program.

Through the columns of the Farm, Stock and Home, and by means of personal work, he has been able to secure large appropriations from the legislature for the upbuilding of the agricultural college. He was appointed regent in 1893 to fill out an unexpired term and was reappointed for a full term in 1895, serving until 1901, when he was retired.

Arbogast Estate Not $20,000.

St. Paul. — The report of the appraisers of the estate of the late Louis Arbogast, who was murdered in his home, St. Paul, May 13, 1909, has been filed with Judge Bazille in the probate court, showing that nearly all the real property is in the name of Mrs. Arbogast. The total valuation of the remaining property, including bonds, mortgages, the homestead where the family lives on West Seventh street, and the merchandise and equipment of the meat market, is less than $20,000.

Mill City Flour Trade Grows.

Minneapolis. — The annual report of the Minneapolis Chamber of Commerce for the calendar year 1909 is out. It shows that the flour mills produced 14,867,245 barrels and exported 1,645,970 barrels compared with a production of 13,694,845 and exports of 2,121,265 in 1909. For the crop year, including four months of 1908 and eight months including August, 1909, the wheat receipts were 84,562,290 bushels. The report shows a prosperous condition of the local grain trade.

BOND ACT UNCONSTITUTIONAL.

Plans For Network of Highways In Hennepin County Are Blasted.

Minneapolis. — Hennepin county's $1,000,000 bond project for good roads, provided by the last legislature, has been declared illegal.

In the decision handed down by the supreme court, the decision of Judge H. D. Dickinson given in the lower court is reversed and the proposed bond issue declared unconstitutional.

The decision is a keen disappointment to residents of Minneapolis and of Hennepin county. The rosy plans that had been formed to spread over Hennepin county a network of good roads which would be of economic value to its citizens, an attraction to tourists and a pleasure for users of automobiles and any other vehicles, have been swept away.

Lawyers Thougt It Good.

The decision which wipes out the good roads plan of Hennepin county was written by Judge Brown. The case is entitled Horace Lowry, appellant, vs. Hugh R. Scott, county auditor of Hennepin county. It was a friendly suit arranged to test the law.

The law authorizing the issuance of the bonds was passed by the assembly of last winter. It authorized bonds in the sum of $1,000,000, for good roads purposes in counties of more than 275,000 inhabitants.

The decision was based on the fact that the act specified counties of 275,000 and over, such classification having no relation to the subject matter.

TAMING SEN. CLAPP FOR TAFT.

This Is the Job Laid Out For the Duluth Collector.

Washington, D. C.—To induce Senator Clapp to line up with the Taft administration, Lee M. Willcutts, collector of customs at Duluth, is in Washington. He, in company with Senator Nelson, called at the White House and went over the situation in congress with the president.

Willcutts, on account of his close relations with Senator Clapp, it is thought, can do more to make him a "good Republican," than any man in the state. It is thought he can convince the senator that his party's good requires his support of the administration measures now pending before congress, and to realize that the "tariff war" is over for the present. What will be asked of the senator is that he give the Payne bill a trial before he attacks it again.

ABUSE OF INSANE CHARGED.

State Board of Control To Investigate.

St. Paul.—Serious charges of abuse of insane patients at the Rochester state asylum have been laid before the state board of control, in a report just taken up by the board.

Most of the acts complained of are said to be several months old, but some are recent. Information first came to the state board of visitors, which sent Secretary James C. Matchitt to Rochester to investigate. He took evidence from nurses and employes and made a report, which was transmitted by the board of visitors to Governor A. O. Eberhart. It was referred by him to the board of control. The members of the board returned from a meeting at Red Wing, and at once took up the report.

PEONAGE FOUND TO EXIST.

State Labor Bureau Getting Results in Northern Minnesota.

St. Paul. — "We are getting some real live information in the peonage charges in Northern Minnesota," said W. E. McEwen, state labor commissioner. "Of course, the information is far from finished," he continued, "but we are finding things of vital importance every day. We now have two inspectors in the field and some interesting statements will be out soon."

BIG FIRE AT SPOONER, MINN.

Hotel, Saloon and General Store Destroyed by Flames.

Rainy River, Ontario. — A disastrous fire broke out in the village of Spooner, Minn., and as a result the Spooner hotel, Kyler & Young's saloon and Egan's general store are a total loss, and but for the timely arrival of a fire-fighting apparatus from Beaudette, many more buildings would have been added to the list.

Egan's loss is $15,000, with $7,000 insurance.

N. Y. JURY ACTIVE

AUTHORITIES EXPECT TO SECURE INDICTMENTS AGAINST MEAT TRUST.

COURT ISSUES DICTUM

Agitation in New York Against High Prices Simmers Down and Crusades Have Nearly Been Abandoned

New York, Feb. 10.—Spurred on by Judge Swayo's charge that a combination to store foodstuffs for the purpose of advancing the price is an overt act, the Hudson county grand jury today continued its investigation of the big cold storage warehouses of Jersey City.

In view of the court's dictum that any combination to raise prices is a conspiracy, Prosecutor Garvin counts on securing indictments that he believes will check the alleged cold storage system whereby the high prices are maintained in season and out.

Agitation in New York City against high meat prices has simmered down until the only remedial measure now in view, locally, is the cold storage regulation ordinance before the board of aldermen. No action on this measure is probable for a week at least.

Meat prices at lent's beginning remain about stationary, but butter and eggs are showing a disposition to decline. This is believed to be due to the seasonable reason and not to the agitation for prices, which seems to have been considered ineffective in the form it had taken during the past few weeks and to have largely been abandoned.

CARNIVAL OF CRIME.

Many Robbers Committed While Police Department Is Probed.

St. Louis, Feb. 10.—While the police department has been busy for the last three weeks investigating itself, because of a shortage of between $17,000 and $25,000 in the relief association funds, criminals have been having a merry time. For twenty-one days ending last night 728 robberies have been entered on the police records. Included in the list of crimes of this period are 148 burglaries, 485 robberies by sneak thieves and twenty-three highway robberies.

An examination of the books of the relief fund is not yet complete, the discovery of several promissory notes for large amounts and signed with the names of men high in the department, has placed these men on the defensive. They declare the figures are forgeries. John Healy, secretary of the relief fund, is under $10,000 bonds to answer Feb. 23 any charge that may be made against him.

HOODOO STILL ACTIVE.

Big Steam Pump Burst in Cherry Mine.

Cherry, Ill., Feb. 10.—A new terror was furnished today to the men who are trying to clear the St. Paul mine, and remove the dead. Just as the big pump was about to be started to eject foul seepage water from the 500-foot level, a four-inch steam pipe burst, throwing a great volume of scalding steam into a 350-foot vein.

The men are working under a nervous tension because of the constant possibility of accidents and by reason of the memory of the fire that killed nearly 300 companions.

The roar of the steam as it hissed from the fractured pipe filled the apprehensive laborers with fear, and drove them from their work for a few minutes. No one was hurt, but the pumping will be delayed several hours.

According to the manager of the Canton bank, $60,000 has been changed into quarters by well-to-do Chinese for the poorer cousins and servants.

Mayor McCarthy's recent proclamation deciding that the Chinese may follow their legitimate gambling games has added a joyful spirit.

MURDERER CONFESSES.

Frank Miki Receives Thirty Year Sentence.

Grafton, N. D., Feb. 9.—Following his conviction by a jury at Grafton last night on the charge of murdering his wife and babe on Christmas day, 1909, Frank Miki today made a complete confession of his crime to the local authorities.

Miki states that a quarrel between his wife and himself over the parentage of their child culminated in the horrible tragedy. The convicted uxoricide claimed that the child was not his while his wife strenuously denied the charge. Becoming enraged over his wife's continued denials, Miki says he grabbed the little baby and strangled it to death. When his wife threatened to have him arrested he attacked her and ended her life in a similar manner.

The jury, which last night convicted Miki, placed his sentence at thirty years in the state penitentiary, but the authorities here now state that he will be given a new trial and it is possible he may be required to pay the penalty for his terrible deed on the gallows.

DOCTOR GAVE SWOPE POISON.

So Say Coroner's Jury in Kansas City Case.

Kansas City, Feb. 9. — "Colonel Swope came to his death by reason of strychnine administered in capsuls by Dr. B. C. Hyde, but whether by felonious intent or not we, the jury, are unable to say."

This verdict was rendered at 1 o'clock this afternoon by the coroner's jury at Independence, after being out one hour. The Swope inquest ended this afternoon. At that time the sensational inquiry into the cause that led to the death of Col. Thos. H. Swope, the millionaire philanthropist, went into the hands of the six jurors, who retired immediately.

Dr. B. C. Hyde, who was the physician to Colonel Swope on the day the latter died, and who prescribed the digestive capsuls, which preceded death only a short while, refused to testify before the coroner's jury, and refused even to be sworn. As a result, more excitement was crowded into the proceedings than had been experienced in two days of the testimony.

The referee is instructed to hold hearings in Mattewan and submit the evidence to Justice Tompkins together with an opinion as to whether Thaw is being properly treated.

Seine Again Rising.

Paris, Feb. 9.—The river Seine had risen nine inches during the twenty-four hours ending at noon today, owing to yesterday's rain and melting snow. The hydrographic department predicts a continued rise until Friday, when the stream will reach the height of more than twenty- two feet at Point Royal and equal the flood level of 1882.

Although confident that there is no danger of a repetition of the recent disaster the authorities are taking thorough precautions.

The resolution bears the name of Senator Elkins as author and embodies the principal features of McCumber's resolution as well as some of those contained in one introduced by Mr. Lodge. The inquiry is to be conducted by a select committee of seven senators. It is planned to assemble all of the information possible at the present session of congress.

SLAIN FOR MONEY.

Such Is Belief in New York's Latest Murder Case.

New York, Feb. 8.—Avarice is believed by the police to have been the motive for the murder of the woman whose dead body was found buried in an excavation under the floor of an apartment house in West Twenty-fourth street yesterday.

Search for the woman's husband, Peter Johannsen, was continued today under added stimulation because in the rooms he is believed to have occupied since the crime, letters were found indicating that Mrs. Johannesen recently came into the possession of $2,500 from a railroad company for the death of her former husband, August Peterson.

Johannesen was janitor of the house where the body was hidden. The family furniture was moved last week and the pair were supposed to have gone to New Jersey. Instead Johannesen had sent the furniture uptown and the body of Sofia, his wife, was dug up yesterday in the vacated apartments.

Whether the woman was strangled or whether the wounds in the temple caused death is expected to be determined by an autopsy set for today. When she was last seen alive on Wednesday she is said to have displayed a large roll of bills.

STOCKWELL LOSES CASE

Must Pay to the State $6,000 in Fees Held by Him.

Grand Forks, N. D., Feb. 7.—Judge C. F. Templeton handed down a decision this morning for the plaintiff in the case of the state vs. W. L. Stockwell, state superintendent of public instruction, in which the state brought suit to recover about $6,000, which covered the amount of fees the defendent had appropriated as part of his salary. Through Attorney General Miller the state brought suit against Stockwell, claiming that a state officer had no right to use the fees that came into his office as part of salary.

Judge Templeton held that section 84 of the North Dakota state constitution was self executing. After fixing the salaries of the various state offials, the section says:

"But the salaries of any of the said officers shall not be increased or diminished during the period for which they shall have been elected, and all fees and profits arising from any of the said offices shall be covered into the state treasury."

The case has attracted great interest.

Parrot's Crys Save Child.

New York, Feb. 8.—Oh, My, Dear Me, Fire, Fire," were cries from the kitchen that awakened Mrs. William Bows in her apartment on First avenue today. Running into the room, Mrs. Bows found it filled with smoke from the thick of which her highly prized South American parrot, an educated talker, had given an alarm in plain language that probably saved the building from burning over the heads of scores of tenants.

Mrs. Bows saved her parrot and the fire which Started in a stove on the ground floor was extinguished with comparatively small damage.

From the Pioneer.

Carl Magnell and Charles Johnson, both of the town of Mayfield, where five short years ago not a settler's cabin was to be seen, are making preparations to erect two large barns so as to properly house their growing herds of stock. The two barns which will rival any seen in the southern part of the state will be 42 by 72 with leantos and a full loft and will be but another addition to the many land marks of a similar kind that loom up on that fruitful prairie.

The First State Bank lately added to their collection of this year's exhibits of Red Lake County grains and grasses some White Dent and White Cap Dent Corn that was grown on the farm of Ralph Green, on the Clearwater river in the town of Deer Park that satisfactorily answers the question as to whether corn can be successfully raised in Red Lake county and show a profit in proportion to that of smaller grains.

This is some that Mr. Green started three years ago and each succeeding year it has become the more acclimated it did better than the previous one.

Discussing Terms.

Come and Bring the Family

A Pardon

By HARRY VON AMBERG

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

"You, boy! Come out o' that and help bring on the wood."

So called the mate of a steamboat on the Mississippi to a pale faced boy lying in his bunk. It was at night, and the weather was stormy.

"I can't; I'm sick."

"You hain't goin' to work yer passage on this yere boat sojern there. Git up, I say, and carry your load."

The boy made a feeble attempt to rise, but failed. The mate seized a stick of wood and held it over the invalid.

"You git up or I'll brain you!"

Fear gave the boy additional strength, and he managed to pull himself out and stagger over the gang plank to a wood pile which the deck hands were transferring to the boat. He worked as best he could till the task was finished, then crawled back to his bunk and fell fainting in it.

This boy, Robert Stewart, was so poor that in order to get from New Orleans to St. Louis he was obliged to work his passage on a steamboat. The mate was a powerful man, and the boy, who was ill with a fever, was completely at his mercy. What made the act still more brutal was that there were plenty of deck hands to do the work without calling out a sick boy. There was something fiendish in the mate's nature that led him to this act of cruelty.

Years passed meanwhile. That sick boy was moving in one direction, while the mate who had tyrannized over him and had nearly cost him his life was moving in another. The one was rising, the other sinking. Schooled in adversity, Robert Stewart possessed that within him which enabled him to triumph over obstacles, the hardships he had endured furnishing a spur to send him onward and upward. Successful in his own affairs, the people intrusted him with theirs. In time his name became known to every one in Missouri. He rose to be governor.

One day a man was brought to the governor from the penitentiary as an applicant for pardon. He was a large, powerful fellow, and the moment the governor looked at him he started. Then he scrutinized the criminal long and closely. Without speaking he turned to his desk, picked up the paper on which the man's pardon had been made out and wrote his name at the bottom of it. Before handing it to the prisoner he said to him:

"I fear it will be useless, perhaps wrong, for me to grant you this pardon."

The man stood stolidly waiting to know the governor's reason.

"You will commit some other crime and be sent to the penitentiary again."

"No, governor; I promise you that I will not."

The governor looked doubtful. He was apparently turning something over in his mind. Finally he said:

"You will go back on to the river—as mate on a steamer, I suppose."

"Yes, governor; I'll go back to work at any position I can get."

"Well," the governor continued, "before I pardon you I wish you to make me a promise."

The man looked interested and waited. The chief magistrate was in no hurry. The mass of business awaiting his attention was forgotten in this pardon case. There must be something in it to move him so strangely. For a few minutes there was a faraway look in his eyes. He seemed to be picturing something. That it was a painful scene was evident from his expression. Then he turned to the criminal and said impressively:

"I wish you to pledge your word that when you go back to the river as mate on a steamboat you will never drive a sick boy from his bunk to load your boat on a stormy night."

The criminal looked at the governor in a vain attempt to understand why he imposed upon him such a singular condition. Then he made the required promise, asking at the same time for an explanation. Finally the governor gave it:

"One night many years ago you were mate of a steamboat running between New Orleans and St. Louis. On that boat was a boy sick with a fever. One night when the wind blew cold and the rain came down in torrents you drove that boy out of his bunk and forced him to carry wood.

"Now, there are two reasons why I don't wish you to do that again. The first is that I desire any boy you might so treat to escape your cruelty. Another time it might cost him his life. The second is that he might become governor of his state and you might commit another crime and come before him with an application for pardon."

The man stood looking at the governor, a faint glimmer of memory struggling in his brain. But with a life of so many brutal acts behind him it was hard for him to remember one which at the time he had considered of so little importance.

The governor handed him his pardon.

"I was that boy," he said. "That document is my revenge. But another time the governor's revenge might be of a different kind. The pardoning power is lodged in the chief magistrate alone, and another governor might see fit to refuse clemency. Go! Try to earn an honest living without brutality."

The criminal slunk away, but whether or not the lesson had any effect on him there is no available record.

Not Breaking Records.

"Ever have any accidents on this road?" asked the passenger who was dissatisfied with the speed of the train.

"Never," replied the conductor, who was paid to say it.

"No collisions?"

"None."

"Train doesn't run off the track?"

"Not yet."

"Well, now, on the square, own up, don't some little boys who start out with you as passengers die of old age before the train reaches its destination?"—Nashville American.

Blind Man's Buff.

At a fashionable European hotel four plausible rogues not long ago treated themselves to a capital dinner in a private room and had no intention of paying for it. Having called the waiter and asked for the bill, one thrust his hand into his pocket as if to draw out his purse. The second prevented him, declaring he would pay. The third did the same. The fourth forbade the waiter taking money from either of them, but all three persisted. As none would yield, one said:

THEY SLIPPED OUT OF THE HOUSE.

"The best way to decide is to blindfold the waiter, and whoever he catches shall settle the bill, while the others shall tip the waiter."

This proposition was accepted, and while the waiter was groping his way about the room they slipped out of the house, one after another, and bolted.

A WINTER ROMANCE

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1910, by Associated Literary Press.

Jed Smith was a farmer's son twenty years old. He was uneducated, uncouth and awkward, but he had romance in his soul. He fell in love with the new schoolma'am at once, and as he was the biggest of the boys and could lick any one of them he felt that he had the best chance. He was going to marry Miss Seymour or know the reason why. When he began to betray signs of his love his father took him out to the barn and turned on him to say:

"Now, Jed Smith, don't you go and make no ding dang fool of yourself!"

It was plain, sensible talk, but Jed wouldn't take it that way. He was a poor reader, but he had digested so many love novels that he wasn't going to let go without a try for it. He had drawn the schoolma'am on his hand sled, he had skated with her, they had slid down hill together, he had brought her the biggest apples of any one, but there was really nothing in these things to arouse her romance, and he realized that romance must come before love. After thinking over it for ten long nights and losing hours of sleep he got his plan. The schoolma'am must be abducted and he must rescue her. At first the trouble seemed to be to find the abductor, but Jed Smith had a way with him. Having got the next biggest boy in the district out to the barn with him, he unfolded his plan and added:

"Jim, you've got to bear the schoolma'am away, and I've got to rescue her. You've got to turn your coat wrong side out and wear a mask and speak in a hoarse voice. In rescuing her I've got to give you a mighty good licking, but as I am going to give you 50 cents you mustn't mind that."

Jim demurred. He didn't want to abduct a schoolma'am, and he didn't want to be licked. He came to it in time, however. Fifty cents in cash was not to be sneezed at, and he would be licked if he refused to enter into the plot. It took some little time to perfect the details, but at last everything was ready. Jed's old father saw fresh "signs," and he took him to task again.

"Jed," he said, "if you are going to make a fool of yourself in any way, then look out for me!"

In winter, especially on a cloudy day, it begins to get dark soon after 4 o'clock in the afternoon. The schoolma'am had often to stay after school had been dismissed to look over the work for the next day. She had only half a mile to go when ready. Sometimes two or three pupils stayed and walked along with her; sometimes she was alone. Luck aided the conspirators. It was young Jim Andrews who was to do the abducting part. His father's barn was near the schoolhouse, and he could both watch and have a horse ready harnessed. Jed Smith was to be waiting up the road.

One afternoon the signal was given, and the plot was afoot. The teacher had remained until almost 5. She was just donning cloak and hat when a masked villain appeared before her and announced in an awful voice:

"Come with me! If you scream or struggle it means death!"

Miss Seymour was properly shocked. She had never seen a masked villain before. No man, holding a peach stone in his mouth to make his voice terrible, had ever thus addressed her. She thought she recognized the figure, and there was a something about the terrible voice that sounded familiar, but she grew faint, her knees weakened, and she was about to sit down when the villain seized her with a grip of steel and bore her out to his sleigh. She screamed and struggled, but she had to go. Jed Smith had said that it would be all the better for the plot if she screamed and struggled. More credit would be due him for rescuing her.

What neither of the plotters had counted on was that some one might come driving along the highway at the critical moment. Some one did come. He was a man without romance in his soul. He was driving a fast horse to a cutter, and when the masked man swung the schoolma'am into his sleigh and started off at a gallop the stranger followed on and cracked his whip and shouted to let the girl know that help was at hand. She heard him, and so did Jim and his horse. In fact, the horse ran away, and just as he reached the point where the rescuer stood waiting he shied into a drift and things were upset. Jed jumped forward, but he had scarcely roared out, "Die, villain!" when he was knocked silly by the stranger. Then the struggling Jim caught it. The schoolma'am was pulled out of the robes and blankets and stood one side, and then her rescuer went in to have some fun with abductor and rescuer.

He stood them on their heads in the drifts; he jammed them about; he walloped them up and down, and when they shouted for mercy he walloped the harder. Then, when tired out, he lifted the girl into his cutter and drove her home. It did not break up the school; it simply broke up the romance of the thing. When Farmer Smith had got through using the gad on the battered Jed he threw it aside and said:

"You was after romance, and I'll give you nuff of it. There's 200 bushels of corn to be husked and shelled, and it's going to be your work from now on to next Fourth of July. Rescuing a gal! Why, durn you, you don't know nuff to rescue an old cabbage head!"

Face the Sun.

Don't hunt after trouble, but look for success.
You'll find what you look for; don't look for distress.
If you see but your shadow, remember, I pray,
That the sun is still shining, but you're in the way.
Don't grumble, don't bluster, don't dream and don't shirk;
Don't think of your worries, but think of your work.
The worries will vanish; the work will be done.
No man sees his shadow who faces the sun.

Twin Spirits

He was a genius—a genius of the brush. When at his easel he was completely absorbed. At such time no one could secure his attention. His luncheon was brought in every day and set down beside him; but, although the servant was instructed to call his attention to it, he seldom knew that it was there. Often after he had finished his work for the day he would feel faint for want of food. Then he would arise to get some and frequently knocked over the stool on which his lunch had been placed and broke the dishes.

She was a poetess. She had had a lover; but, finding that she didn't feel those heavenly thrills of which she had written of people in such condition, she had broken off her engagement with him. She had seen the artist's pictures and was sure she loved the man who painted them. She burned to know him and asked every friend she possessed to introduce her. But none of them was acquainted with him.

But her yearning for him would not down. She resolved to visit him in his studio. A friend to whom she had given her confidence advised her to "brush up a bit," leave off her black alpaca and put on silk. But the recommendation did not impress her. Love was a matter of the soul; it had nothing to do with clothes, whereupon her friend admonished her to wear something pretty all the same.

She went to his studio, climbed several flights of stairs—she was delicate, and the effort made her heart throb violently—and tapped softly at the door. There was no response. No sound came from within. She tried the doorknob, turning it gently, then pushed the door slightly ajar. He was there. He sat at his easel before a canvas on which were a divine face and figure. The latch slipped back, making a sound. She started, thinking it would betray her. No; he went on painting. What a noble brow! His tumbled hair—it was thin—caressed the crown of his august head.

What should she do? Should she break the spell under which he worked by speaking? No; there was a chair near by. She would go and sit upon it till he came to himself or from himself. So she went softly to the chair, keeping her eyes upon him the while, and sat down.

Alas, she sat upon a palette—a palette on which were soft paints of many bright colors!

She sat looking at him, yearning for him. Presently he looked aside from his work and straight at her. Through his eyes looked a great spirit. But they did not see her; they were as those of a somnambulist. He turned his gaze back to his easel.

For another half hour he worked. She would no sooner drag him down from his idea flight than she pulled down herself when a poem was welling up in her own heart.

Presently she arose to go. She had seen him. Her soul had caressed his. It was enough.

But unfortunately something fell on the floor.

"Where have you been?" he asked. "I've been waiting for you. I must put in the eyes." Then, without waiting, he went on: "A little closer, please. There, face the light."

At the same time he turned and looked into her eyes. He thought she was his model. But she did not know it. She thought that his lofty intellect had stalked over the gap of a want of acquaintance.

Then he began to paint, putting her own dark, poetic eyes into the head on the canvas, turning often to look into those of flesh and blood. In her poetic imagination she fancied that he was taking, spiritually, her eyes from her body and placing them in the head of an angel.

At last the work was finished. He arose, stood at a short distance from it, viewed it critically, made a few touches, threw down his brush, put his hand in his pocket, fished out a plug of black tobacco and bit off a quid.

As her romance, pierced to the heart, died within her she gave a little cry. He turned and looked at her through eyes from which the light of Genius Creatrix had gone out and saw her as she was, a lean, homely old maid with handsome eyes.

"Who in thunder are you?" he blurted.

Poor woman! Had the romance remained it would have been quite embarrassing enough, but it had vanished with the appearance of the tobacco. What to say she did not know. There was but one thing for her to do—leave the studio. She slunk toward the door. He followed her with his eyes.

"Stop!" he said suddenly, making a few quick strides toward her. Was he going to break even the fragments of the idol she had raised and how? He seized her skirt—that part of it which hung in rear—and, spreading it out, exclaimed:

"Great Scott!"

"What is it?" she asked, not being able to see behind her.

"You've been sitting on my palette!" he said, surveying the wreck of her dress ruefully. The dress was a confusion of vermilion, prussian blue, chrome yellow, violet and other colors.

Then, telling her to wait, he rushed for turpentine and other articles and in a quarter of an hour had got off the most of the paint. As she passed out he said:

"Thank you for the use of your eyes."

Cutting the Finger Nails.

Cutting the finger nails appears to have been the most indispensable service the ancient Roman barber rendered to his patrons. Martial, chaffing a fop who had tried to dodge the barber by using plasters to remove his beard, asks triumphantly, "How are you going to manage about your nails?" And the miser in Plautus collects the parings of his nails from the barber to make something out of them, apparently never dreaming that he could save money by cutting them himself.

Cheeriness.

Cheeriness is a thing to be more profoundly grateful for than all that genius ever inspired or talent ever accomplished. Next best to natural, spontaneous cheeriness is deliberate, intended and persistent cheeriness, which we can create, can cultivate and can so foster and cherish that after a few years the world will never suspect that it was not an hereditary gift.—Helen Hunt Jackson.

MANY MEN OF MANY MINDS

Big Number of Farmers From Reservation Towns Here This Week.

Lively Session of County Board—Ditch Petitions Being Considered.

A few of the reservation farmers are at home this week; the rest of them are in town. They are here to be heard for or against the establishment of certain drainage ditches and most of 'em are being heard and some are for and some are agin every proposition.

There are some lively contentions among the reservation people and the county commissioners were kept busy yesterday and will probably be occupied all of today considering the petitions asking for the establishment of county ditches No. 38, 39, 40 and 41. While there are four petitions, it is all one network of ditches in Star and Highlanding and other towns the construction of which are proposed.

There is no difference of opinion as to the necessity for the proposed ditch work but there is a decided lack of harmony in the expression of opinions as to the courses certain ditches and branches shall take.

Just how the puzzle is going to be solved is still a very puzzling puzzle and the commissioners and fifty or more farmers will be busy all of today and maybe tomorrow, trying to "get their heads together."

The other petitions asking for the appointment of engineer and viewers on other proposed ditch work will be considered and other business transacted after the four petitions now in contention are disposed of. The official proceedings will be published in a later issue of the Gazette.

MRS. ARROWSMITH DEAD

Passed Away at North Yakima, Wash., Saturday.

Word was received here today of the death of Mrs. George Arrowsmith which occurred at North Yakima, Washington, last Saturday. Death was due to tuberculosis from which deceased had been a sufferer for a number of years. Mrs. Arrowsmith formerly resided here and had many friends who will regret to learn of her death. The family resided on the Behn farm, south of town, for a number of years. Mrs. Arrowsmith was a sister of Theo. LaBissoniere and there are other relatives here.

Got Ten Days.

James Torgeson, who resides southeast of town, was taken into custody last Saturday by Sheriff Nelson on a complaint made by Knut Knutson charging him with violence and threatening to commit arson. As the defendent was under the influence of liquor at the time, the complaint was changed to one charging him with being drunk and disorderly. On that charge he was given a hearing Monday evening before Justice Pahlen, who decided that he had better become the guest of Sheriff Nelson at Red Lake Falls for the next ten days giving him time to think over his shortcomings that he might see the error of his ways and maybe to resolve to be a law abiding citizen in the future.

The defendant is an old offender against the peace in the community and was given a warning by Justice Pahlen to the effect that if he appeared before him again as a disturbing element he would not get off so easily. Attorney Boughton was over from Red Lake Falls to appear for the defendant and County Attorney Michelet came down from Thief River Falls to prosecute.—Plummer Pioneer.

Andy Rubertus left Monday evening on a business trip to the southern part of the state. He will visit the twin cities and Montevideo and will be gone a week or more.

IT IS ALL OVER NOW

The Contract for the Construction of the Court House Has Been Awarded to James Brady.---The Building Will Be Completed Nov. 1. 1910.

The Bonds Were Sold at a Low Rate of Interest With a Big Premium.---J. A. Duffy of This City, is the Successful Bidder.

The county commissioners were were in session last Thursday for the purpose of receiving and considering bids for the purchase of the court house bonds and also bids for the contract for the construction of the building.

Red Lake county court house bonds were in demand. There were a number of representatives of the bidders present at the meeting. The following bids were received:

Bidder	Rate	Premium
Woodin, McNear and Moor	4¾	$ 37
F. E. Magraw	4½	400
John Nuveen & Co.	5	607
Harris Trust & Savings Bank	4½	843
Security Trust & Savings Bank	5½	962
C. H. Coffin	5½	1000
Seasongood & Muyer	5	1216
Reynolds, Watson & Co.	5	1184
Otis & Hugh	5	1485
S. A. Kean & Co.	5½	1157
J. A. Duffy	5½	1000
E. H. Kellins & Sons	5	11470

After the bids were opened and read a motion was carried that the representatives present be allowed the opportunity to withdraw their bids. A motion then carried that the board receive and consider open bids. There was some spirited bidding between a representative of Reynolds, Watson & Co. and J. A. Duffy. The rate of interest offered by each was 5 per cent, the amount of the premium offered being increased with each bid. Reynolds, Watson and Co. bid $1780 Mr. Duffy bid $1800. That was the highest bid and the five per cent bonds of the county were sold to Mr. Duffy at a premium of $1800.

When the bids were opened the commissioners were skeptical about some of them, so it was decided that it would be well to give the bidders a chance to come out in the open and make a scrap for the purchase of the bonds.

The contract for the construction of the building was awarded to James Brady, his being the lowest bid received. The contract price is $37,070.00 and by the terms of the contract Mr. Brady agrees to have the building completed by Nov. 1, 1910. Aug. Marin offered to do the work for $38,263.00. The bid of W. H. Jackson was $38,860.00 and that of Nelson & Schulind $40,715.00.

The contract does not provide that the building is to be erected on the beautiful site on court house hill.

The Thief River people made feeble objection to the letting of the contract and to satisfy them it was decided that the contract would not specify that the building is to be erected on the hill. It may be that the commissioners believed that the proposed site would serve better as a location for the erection of a monument in honor of Brer. John Eastman and other vanquished heroes of the county seat war.

However, the commissioners may reconsider that action and may decide that the fine new court house will be a sufficient monument to do honor to all of the heroes (and Don O'Neil, too,) in the county seat fight and they may decide to put the building on the hill after all. Who knows? It's all over, anyhow.

Frank E. Hunt has spent the week in the twin cities attending to some business matters.

Rev. John C. Davis of St. Paul will preach at the Presbyterian church, on Sunday, Feb. 17, at both the morning and evening services at the usual hours.

YOUNG MAN IS BURNED TO DEATH

Was Employed on New Soo Line Building East of Plummer.

A temporary building used as a camp by a crew engaged in railroad construction work on the Soo line being built east of Plummer was burned last Wednesday. The fire occurred while the men were away at work. When the man in charge of the camp returned he found the building in ruins and the young man who was employed about the camp as office boy was missing. The man made a search through the ruins and came upon the charred remains of the young man. The cause of the fire is unknown and the Gazette has been unable to learn the name of the young men that was burned to death.

Obituary.

Mrs. Lovie Miller, an account of whose death and funeral was published in the last issue of the Gazette, was one of the pioneers of Red Lake county and of Gervais township, having resided here thirty years. She came to Minnesota with her husband in 1880.

Fannie Pearl Des Lamparcy was born at St. Martin, Canada, and at the time of her death was seventy-four years old. On Aug. 17, 1860, she and Mr. Miller were married at St. Martin, Canada. Before coming to Red Lake county the family resided in Clinton county, New York, for many years.

Deceased is survived by her husband, Levio Miller, now seventy-one years old, and four sons and two daughters. The sons, Samuel and Joseph of Red Lake Falls, Napoleon of Grand Rapids, Minn., and Peter of Sand Point, Idaho, were at their mother's bedside at the time of her death. The daughters, Mrs. Jos. Patnode and Mrs. B. Westover, both of Harlem, Idaho, were not here for the funeral.

Peter Peterson and Roy Franklin of Alexandria were guests of the former's brother, Julius Peterson of the Gazette force, Monday.

SETTING A TRAP FOR THE GOVERNOR

County Option People Had a Hole Fixed for Governor to Drop in.

But the Governor Talked Too Much and Spoiled the Whole Show.

St. Paul, February 22. The real animus of the proposed county option convention—that is the animus of the politicians who are back of the move, may be seen in the totally uncalled for attack Mr. Youngdahl, the superintendent of the anti-saloon league, has seen fit to make on Governor Eberhart, after the governor had declined to fall into the trap the superintendent and his conferers had set for him.

Setting a Trap.

That their design was to entrap Governer Eberhart into making a declaration of his attitude toward county option, when they asked him to welcome the delegates to the county option convention to St. Paul, is apparent. The request was eminently illogical. In the first place the convention needed no welcome to the capitol city. It is its right to meet here if it is so desired. In the next place if the county optionists were so bashful as to be unable to enter upon their duties without encouragement from St. Paul, the mayor of the city ought to have been asked to lend his countenance. In his absence he could and doubtless would have found a fitting substitute who would have given the anti-saloon league the desired boost.

Criticism Disarmed.

But really Youndahl cared nothing about that. He was out gunning for Eberhart against whom the professional temperance reformers appear to imagine they have a grievance. So they asked him to talk at the convention. The governor took the wind completely out of their sails by consenting. If he had been satisfied to let it go at that the governor would clearly have had the best of it, for the county option people had no doubt anticipated a refusal from the governor or an evasion. In either case he would have been attacked. Having consented the governor's enemies were completely disarmed.

An Unfortunate Gift.

Unfortunately the governor has the fatal gift of speech. If there is anything he delights in more than seeing his name in print, it is hearing the sound of his own voice. He never loses an occasion for exuberant verbosity. It was so in this case. To the first reporter who came along he could not forbear unbosoming himself as to what he intended to say to the county option people and as to what he intended not to say. It was again a case of the voluble bird who talked too much.

The Governor's Hands Tied.

Not that any reasonable person could find fault with what the governor told the reporter. We all recognize the fact that the governor of the state and the leader of the party cannot be completely divorced from the individual. By virtue of position Governor Eberhart is the official head in this state of the Republican party. Any views given by him in matters of state are at once recognized by Republican voters as the expression of party attitude. When Governor Eberhart declares for the extention of agricultural education it is perfectly well understood that he commits the Republican party to that policy. When he takes a stand for conservation it is recognized that he takes the stand for the Republican administration and the members of the legislature loyal to the Republican party. Likewise, when Governor Eberhart commits himself to capitol grounds extention and the spending of two or three millions in capitol approaches we recognise in his voice that of Republican leadership as we recognize in the liquidation of the Seebury claim the Republican way of discharging a political trust.

THE BIG MEETING HELD AT BEMIDJI

Organized Effort to do Things for Northern Minnesota's Development.

Permanent Organization, Northern Minnesota Development Association, Organized.

Delegates from thirty counties in northern Minnesota were in attendance at the big development and reapportionment meeting held at Bemidji last Thursday and Friday. It was an enthusiastic gathering and an association, to be known as the Northern Minnesota Development association, was organized. Branches of the general association are to be organized in each county.

Of course the matter of reapportionment received much consideration at the meeting. The convention in resolutions adopted went on record as follows:

"Whereas, the representation of the northern half of the State in the State Legislature is conceded to be wholly inequitable and unjust in view of the rapid growth in population of that part of the state as compared with other portions, and

"Whereas, this condition is contrary both to the letter and spirit of the Constitution of the State of Minnesota and to every principal of right and justice,

"Be it resolved, that this Association demands imperatively that a reapportionment be made at the coming session of the Legislature that shall remedy this condition on a basis which will give to all parts of the state equal representation both in the Senate and in the House according to the population as shown by the United States census of 1910.

"Be it further resolved, that to this end; we recommend that all candidates for the Senate and for the House of Representatives from the counties included in this organization be required to pledge themselves to work and to vote for such a law regardless of their personal or political interests and that those who fail to make such pledge be refused support at the polls without regard to party.

"Be it further resolved, that all political parties be requested to insert in their platforms a plank pledging the early passage of a just reapportionment law."

Many other questions effecting northern Minnesota were discussed. The convention went on record as favoring legislative action submitting to the people of the state a constitutional amendment providing for a one mill property tax for road purposes, the fund to be raised by such tax to be distributed by the state highway commission. It is also suggested by resolution that the state board of investment dispose of, at the earliest possible opportunity, enough of the bonds of other states to secure and loan to the people of this state the money essential for state development, especially for roads, drainage and schools.

The activity of the state drainage board and of the federal government in making surveys is approved and the campaign of the federation of commercial clubs for a state appropriation of $100,000 per year for advertising under direction of the immigration department was endorsed.

More provision for agricultural and industrial education is urged. Resolutions bearing on this subject were adopted as follows:

"Be it resolved, that the state of Minnesota should, proceeding along similar lines to those by which it has built up its excellent system of urban, graded and high schools, build up a system of rural, township and graded high schools which shall fully meet the needs of our rural population and shall insure to them in their home schools as much instruction in elementary agriculture, manual training and home economics as it is possible to give.

"Further be it resolved, that we recommend to the State Legislature the establishment of a Rural High School Board whose duties it shall be to foster and direct the building up of an efficient system of rural schools."

Northern Minnesota has spoken very emphatically and it is expected that the united effort being made will bring about better conditions.

Alex F. Lattimore, editor of the Eleven Towns, published at Erie, has been in town this week. Mr. Lattimore is interested in the ditch proceedings before the county board. He returned to Erie this morning.

"It's a Grand Ruby," He Said.

Margaret was sure that she was not going to like him, as she moved on with him by her side; and Van Torp, walking with Mrs. Rushmore, was quite certain that he was Levi Logotheti, who had herded cattle with him for six months very long ago.

CHAPTER IX.

Logotheti reached his lodgings in St. James' place at six o'clock in the evening of the day on which he had promised to dine with Van Torp, and the latter's note of excuse was given to him at once. He read it, looked out of the window, glanced at it again, and threw it into the waste-paper basket without another thought. He did not care in the least about dining with the American millionaire. In fact, he had looked forward to it rather as a bore than a pleasure. He saw on his table, with his letters, a flat and almost square parcel, which the addressed label told him contained the Archaeological Report of the Egyptian Exploration Fund, and he had heard that the new number would contain an account of a papyrus recently discovered at Oxyrrhynchus, on which some new fragments of Pindar had been found. No dinner that could be devised, and no company that could be asked to meet him at it, could be half as delightful as that to the man who so deeply loved the ancient literature of his country, and he made up his mind at once that he would not even take the trouble to go to a club, but would have a bird and a salad in his rooms.

Unhappily for his peace and his anticipated feast of poetry, he looked through his letters to see if there were one from Margaret, and there was only a colored postcard from Bayreuth, with the word "greetings" scrawled beside the address in her large hand. Next to the card, however, there was a thick letter addressed in a commercial writing he remembered but could not at once identify; and though it was apparently a business communication, and could therefore have waited till the next morning, when his secretary would come as usual, he opened it out of mere curiosity to know whence it came.

It was from Mr. Pinney, the jeweler, and it contained a full and conscientious account of the whole affair of the theft, from the moment when Logotheti and Van Torp had gone out together until Mr. Pinney had locked up the stone in his safe again, and Baraka and Spiro had been lodged in Brixton jail. The envelope contained also a cutting from the newspaper similar to the one Margaret had received from Lady Maud.

Logotheti laid the letter on the table and looked at his watch. It was now a quarter past six, and old-fashioned shops like Pinney's close rather early in the dull season, when few customers are to be expected and the days are not so long as they have been. In the latter part of August, in London, the sun sets soon after seven o'clock, and Logotheti realized that he had no time to lose.

As he drove quickly up towards Bond street, he ran over the circumstances in his mind, and came to the conclusion that Baraka had probably been the victim of a trick, though he did not exclude the bare possibility that she might be guilty.

He found Mr. Pinney in the act of turning the discs of the safe before going home and leaving his shopman to shut up the place. He smiled with grave satisfaction when Logotheti entered.

"I was hoping to see you, sir," he said. "I presume that you had my letter? I wrote out the account with great care, as you may imagine, but I shall be happy to go over the story with you if there is any point that is not clear."

Logotheti did not wish to hear it; he wished to see the ruby. Mr. Pinney turned the discs again to their places, stuck the little key into the secret keyhole which then revealed itself, turned it three times to the left and five times to the right, and opened the heavy iron door. The safe was an old-fashioned one that had belonged to his father before him. He got out the japanned tin box, opened that, and produced the stone, still in its paper, for it was too thick to be put into one of Mr. Pinney's favorite pill boxes.

Logotheti undid the paper, took out the big uncut ruby, laid it in the palm of his hand, and looked at it critically, turning it over with one finger from time to time. He took it to the door of the shop, where the evening light was stronger, and examined it with the greatest care. Still he did not seem satisfied.

"Let me have your lens, Mr. Pinney," he said, "and some electric light and a sheet of white paper."

Mr. Pinney turned up a strong drop light that stood on the counter, and produced the paper and a magnifier.

"It's a grand ruby," he said.

"I see it is," Logotheti answered rather curtly.

"Do you mean to say," asked the surprised jeweler, "that you had bought it without thoroughly examining it sir—you who are an expert?"

"No, that's not what I mean," answered the Greek, bending over the ruby and scrutinizing it through the strong magnifier.

Mr. Pinney felt himself snubbed, which had not happened to him for a long time, and he drew himself up with dignity. A minute passed, and Logotheti did not look up; another and Mr. Pinney grew nervous; a few seconds more, and he received a shock that took away his breath.

"This is not my ruby," said Logotheti, looking up, and speaking with perfect confidence.

"Not—your—ruby!" Mr. Pinney's jaw dropped. "But—" He could get no further.

"I'm sorry," Logotheti said calmly. "I'm very sorry, for several reasons. But it's not the stone I brought you, though it's just as large, and most extraordinarily like it."

"But how do you know, sir?" gasped the jeweler.

"Because I'm an expert, as you were good enough to say just now."

"Yes, sir. But I am an expert, too, and to the best of my expert belief this is the stone you left with me to be cut the day before yesterday. I've examined it most thoroughly."

"No doubt," answered the Greek. "But you hadn't examined mine thoroughly before it was stolen, had you? You had only looked at it with me, on the counter here."

"That is correct, sir," said Mr. Pinney nervously. "That is quite true."

"Very well. But I did more than merely look at it through a lens or weigh it. I did not care so much about the weight, but I cared very much for the water, and I tried the ruby point on it in the usual way, but it was too hard, and then I scratched it in two places with the diamond, more out of curiosity than for any other reason."

"You marked it, sir? There's not a single scratch on this one! Merciful Providence! Merciful Providence!"

"Yes," Logotheti said gravely. "The girl spoke the truth. She had two stones much larger than the rest when she first came to me in Paris, this one and another. They were almost exactly alike, and she wanted me to buy both, but I did not want them, and I took the one I thought a little better in color. This is the other, for she still had it; and, so far as I know, it is her legal property, and mine is gone. The thief was one of those two young fellows who came in just when Mr. Van Torp and I went out. I remember thinking what nice-looking boys they were!"

He laughed rather harshly, for he was more annoyed than his consideration for Mr. Pinney made him care to show. He had looked forward to giving Margaret the ruby, mounted just as she wanted it; and the ruby was gone, and he did not know where he was to find another, except the one that was now in Pinney's hands, but really belonged to poor Baraka, who could certainly not sell it at present. A much larger sum of money was gone, too, than any financier could lose with equanimity by such a peculiarly disagreeable mishap as being robbed. There were several reasons why Logotheti was not pleased.

"I am deeply humiliated," said the worthy old jeweler. "I have not only been tricked and plundered, but I have been the means of sending innocent people to prison."

"You had better be the means of getting them out again as soon as possible," said Logotheti. "And you must also make an effort to trace those young men who stole the ruby."

"I most certainly shall," replied the jeweler, "and if it is not found we will make it good to you, sir, whatever price you set upon it. I am deeply humiliated, but nobody shall say that Pinney & Son do not make good any loss their customers sustain through them."

"Don't worry about that, Mr. Pinney," said Logotheti, who saw how much distressed the old jeweler really was.

So they went out and hailed a hansom and drove away.

It would be tiresome to give a detailed account of what they did. Suffice it to say that the prisoners were set at large; Mr. Pinney restored the ruby to Baraka, and all her other belongings were given back to her, even including the smart gray suit of men's clothes in which she had been arrested; and her luggage and other things which the manager of the hotel where she had been stopping had handed over to the police were all returned; and when Spiro appeared at the hotel to pay the small bill that had been left owing, he held his head as high as an oriental can when he has got the better of any one, and that is pretty high indeed. Furthermore, Mr. Pinney insisted on giving Logotheti a formal document by which Messrs. Pinney & Son bound themselves to make good to him, his heirs, or assigns, the loss of a ruby, approximately of a certain weight and quality, which he had lost through their carelessness.

On the day following Baraka's liberation, Lady Maud received Margaret's pressing message begging her to go to Bayreuth. The message reached her before noon, about the time when Margaret and her companions had come back from their morning walk, and after hesitating for half an hour, she telegraphed that she would come with pleasure, and would start at once which meant that evening.

She had just read the official account of the ruby case in its new aspect, and she did not believe a word of the story. To her mind it was quite clear that Logotheti was still infatuated with the girl, that he had come to London as fast as he could, and that he had deliberately sworn that the ruby was not his, but another one, in order to get her out of trouble. If it was not his it had not been stolen from Pinney's, and the whole case fell through at once. If she was declared innocent the stone must be given back to her; he would take it from her as soon as they were alone and return it to his own pocket; and being an oriental, he would probably beat her for robbing him, but would not let her out of his sight again till he was tired of her. Lady Maud had heard from her late husband how all Turks believed that women had no souls and should be kept under lock and key, and well fed, and soundly beaten now and then for the good of their tempers. This view was exaggerated, but Lady Maud was in a humor to recall it and accept it without criticism, and she made up her mind that before leaving town to join Margaret she would make sure of the facts. No friend of hers should marry a man capable of such outrageous deeds.

So she went to Logotheti's lodgings and asked to see him, as regardless of what any one should think of her, if she were recognized, as she had been in the old days when she used to go to Van Torp's chambers in the Temple in the evening.

She was told that Logotheti was out of town. Where? The servant did not know that. The lady could see the secretary, who might, perhaps, tell her. He received every one who had business with Mons. Logotheti.

She went up one flight and was admitted to a very airy sitting room, simply furnished.

The Swiss secretary rose ponderously to receive her, and as she did not sit down he remained standing. His vast face was fringed with a beard of no particular color, and his eyes were fixed and blue in his head, like turquoises set in pale sole leather.

"I am Countess Leven," she said, "and I have known Mons. Logotheti some time. Will you kindly tell me where he is?"

"I do not know, madam," was the answer.

"He is not in London?"

"At present I do not know, madam."

"Has he left no address? Do you not forward his letters to him?"

"No, madam. I do not forward his letters to him."

"Then I suppose he is on his yacht," suggested Lady Maud.

"Madam, I do not know whether he is on his yacht."

"You don't seem to know anything!"

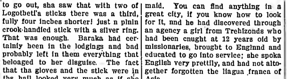
"Pardon me, madam, I think I know my business. That is all I know."

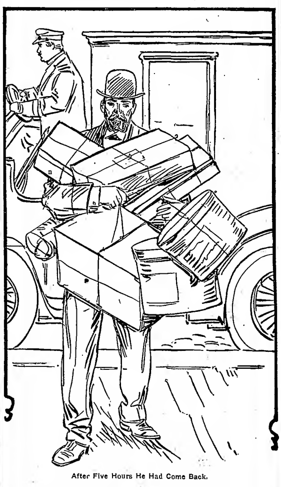
Lady Maud held her beautiful head a little higher and her lids dropped slightly as she looked down at him, for he was shorter than she. But the huge leathern face was perfectly impassive, and the still, turquoise eyes surveyed her without winking. She had never seen such stolidity in a human being.

There was clearly nothing to be done, and she thought the secretary distinctly rude; but as that was no reason why she should be, she bade him good-morning civilly and turned to go. Somewhat to her surprise, he followed her quickly across the room, opened the door for her and went on into the little hall to let her out. There was a small table there, on which lay some of Logotheti's hats, and several pairs of gloves were laid out neatly before them. There was one pair, of a light gray, very much smaller than all the rest, so small, indeed, that they might have fitted a boy of seven, except that they looked too narrow for any boy. They were men's gloves as to length and buttons, but only a child could have worn them.

Lady Maud saw them instantly, and remembered Baraka's disguise; and as she passed the big umbrella jar to go out, she saw that with two of Logotheti's sticks there was a third, fully four inches shorter! just a plain crook-handled stick with a silver ring. That was enough. Baraka had certainly been in the lodgings and had probably left in them everything that belonged to her disguise. The fact that the gloves and the stick were in the hall looked very much as if she had come in dressed as a man and had left them there when she had gone away in woman's attire. That she was with Logotheti, most probably on his yacht, Lady Maud had not the least doubt, as she went down the stairs.

The Swiss secretary stood at the open door on the landing till she was out of sight below, and then went in again, and returned to work over a heap of business papers and letters. When he had worked half an hour, he leaned back in his leathern chair to rest, and stared fixedly at the bookcase. Presently he spoke aloud in English, as if Lady Maud were still in the room, in the same dull, matter-of-fact tone, but more forcibly as to expression.





After Five Hours He Had Come Back.

"It is perfectly true, though you do not believe me, madam. I do not know anything. How the dickens should I know where they are, madam? But I know my business. That is all."

CHAPTER X.

The Erinna was steaming quietly down the channel in a flat calm, at the lazy rate of 12 knots an hour, presumably in order to save her coal, for she could run 16 when her owner liked, and he was not usually fond of going slow. Though September was at hand, and Guernsey was already on the port quarter, the sea was motionless and not so much as a cat's paw stirred the still blue water; but the steamer's own way made a pleasant draught that fanned the faces of Logotheti and Baraka as they lay in their long chairs under the double awning outside the deckhouse.

The Tartar girl wore a skirt and jacket of dark blue yachting serge, which did not fit badly considering that they had been bought ready-made by Logotheti's man. She had little white tennis shoes on her feet, which were crossed one over the other on the deck chair, but instead of wearing a hat she had bound a dove-colored motor veil on her head by a single thick gold cord, in the Asiatic way, and the thin folds hung down on each side, and lay on her shoulders, shading her face, and the breeze stirred them. Logotheti's valet had been sent out in a taximeter, provided with a few measurements and plenty of cash, and commissioned to buy everything that a girl who had nothing at all to wear, visible or invisible, could possibly need. He was also instructed to find a maid who could speak Tartar, or at least a little Turkish.

After five hours he had come back with a heavy load of boxes of all shapes and sizes and the required maid. You can find anything in a great city, if you know how to look for it, and he had discovered through an agency a girl from Trebizond who had been caught at 12 years old by missionaries, brought to England and educated to go into service; she spoke English very prettily, and had not altogether forgotten the lingua franca of Asia.

The consequence of her presence was that Baraka was dressed with great neatness and care, and looked very presentable, though her clothes were only ready-made things, bought by a man-servant, who had only her height and the size of her waist to guide him. Logotheti watched her delicate, energetic profile, admiring the curves of her closed lips, and the willful turning up of her little chin. She was more than very pretty now, he thought, and he was quietly amused at his own audacity in taking her to sea alone with him, almost on the eve of his marriage. It was especially diverting to think of what the proper people would say, if they knew it, and to contrast the intentions they would certainly attribute to him with the perfectly honorable ones he entertained.

As for Baraka, it never occurred to her that she was not as safe with him as she had been in her father's house in the little white town far away, nearly three years ago; and besides, her steel bodkin with the silver handle had been given back to her, and she could feel it in its place when she pressed her left hand to her side.

Logotheti has been first of all preoccupied about getting Baraka out of England without attracting attention, and then for her comfort and recovery from the strain and suffering of the last few days. As for that, she was like a healthy young animal, and as soon as she had a chance she had fallen so sound asleep that she had not waked for 12 hours. Logotheti's intent was to take her to Paris by a roundabout way, and establish her under some proper sort of protection. Margaret was still in Germany, but would soon return to France, and he had almost made up his mind to ask her advice, not dreaming that in such a case she could really deem anything he did an unpardonable offence. He had always laughed at the conventionalities of European life, and had paid very little heed to them when they stood in his way.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Wit Often an Affliction.

Wit is an affliction unless used with discretion and good sense. The habit of being invariably amusing will bring you into great disfavor. The sharp-tongued woman who will have her little laugh at the expense of her neighbors usually pays dearly for her fun. It is as much an art to be quiet and self-possessed as to be vivacious and entertaining, and the woman who can adjust her moods to the occasion is the one who finds herself usually the most popular member of her community.

THE KENTUCKIAN WAS PLEASED

HE SECURED A GOOD HALF-SECTION IN CENTRAL CANADA.

It is not only from Kentucky, but from thirty-five to forty different States that there comes the expression of satisfaction from those who have taken up lands in Central Canada as a free homestead or have purchased lands.

Mr. E. K. Bell, of Frankfort, Kentucky, writes to a Canadian Government Official, and says: "I have just returned from Alberta, overjoyed with my trip. Your literature was very flattering, but not half what I found it. I bought a half section between Calgary and Edmonton, one mile from railroad, near a good town. This is the best country I ever saw or ever expect to see. I will go in the spring and get to work on my place. I think it is the coming Country of the World." Some of the papers describe the settling of the Canadian West as "becoming a fever with a great many people. The lure of its golden promises is creeping into their hearts and many are they who are answering the call of that unsettled territory." This paper editorially cautions its readers to exercise care and thought before moving to a distant country. This would be a wise precaution, and is exactly what the Canadian officials ask.

The success of the settler who has made Canada his home for years is the best evidence that can be offered. And of the large number of Americans who have made their homes in Canada, very few have returned. All are satisfied.

People Realize the Danger.

As an indication of the force of the crusade against tuberculosis, the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis, in a bulletin issued recently points to the fact that while 53.5 per cent. of the expenditures for tuberculosis in 1909 were made from public resources, appropriations made for 1910 indicate that over 75 per cent. of the money to be spent this year will be from federal, state, city and county funds. In 1909, out of the $8,180,621.50 spent for the prevention and treatment of tuberculosis, $4,362,750.03 was spent from public money, and $3,817,871.47 from funds voluntarily contributed. For the carrying on of state, federal and municipal tuberculosis work in 1910, over $9,000,000 has been appropriated. Of this sum, the state legislatures have granted $4,100,000, the municipal and county bodies, $3,975,500 and the federal government $1,000,000.

Practical Christianity.

"On behalf of the sewing circle of this church," said the pastor at the conclusion of the morning service, "I desire to thank the congregation for 57 buttons placed in the contribution box during the past month. If now the philanthropically inclined donors of these objects will put a half-dozen undershirts and three pairs of other strictly secular garments on the plate next Sunday morning, so that we may have something to sew those buttons on, we shall be additionally grateful."—Harper's Weekly.

Teamster's Punishment Earned.

Apparently it pays not to be cruel to horses out in Chicago. A teamster who admitted abandoning his horses for six hours on a recent stormy day was fined $50 by a magistrate. The humane society prosecuted the case vigorously and promised to report the matter to the driver's employers. Presumably he will lose his job, as he was unable to pay the fine and will have to serve a jail term.

For Shame, Mr. Staggers.

"Our splendid cook left to-day and I had to take her place," said Mrs. Staggers. "I hope I shall be successful in imitating her."

"I certainly hope you will be successful in following in her footsteps," suggestively remarked old man Staggers as he chewed on a crisp-boiled potato.

Paradoxical.

"It is a wonder that a hot-headed man is generally thought to be one of mettle."

"Why a wonder?"

"Because metal is usually well tempered."

Nothing endures but the eternal commonplace; and if one departs from that it is to run the most perilous risks.—Charles Wagner.

GET POWER.

The Supply Comes From Food.

If we get power from food, why not strive to get all the power we can. That is only possible by use of skillfully selected food that exactly fits the requirements of the body.

Poor fuel makes a poor fire, and a poor fire is not a good steam producer.

"From not knowing how to select the right food to fit my needs, I suffered grievously for a long time from stomach troubles," writes a lady from a little town in Missouri.

"It seemed as if I would never be able to find out the sort of food that was best for me. Hardly anything that I could eat would stay on my stomach. Every attempt gave me heart-burn and filled my stomach with gas. I got thinner and thinner until I literally became a living skeleton and in time was compelled to keep to my bed.

"A few months ago I was persuaded to try Grape-Nuts food, and it had such good effect from the very beginning that I have kept up its use ever since. I was surprised at the ease with which I digested it. It proved to be just what I needed.

"All my unpleasant symptoms, the heart-burn, the inflated feeling which gave me such pain disappeared. My weight gradually increased from 98 to 116 lbs., my figure rounded out, my strength came back, and I am now able to do my housework and enjoy it. Grape-Nuts did it."

A ten days' trial will show anyone some facts about food.

Look in pkgs. for the little book, "The Road to Wellville." "There's a Reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

Is Need For Definite Rule

Writer in Woman's Publication Deplores Custom of Indiscriminate Gift Giving.

Just how much are the parents responsible for the indiscriminate giving of presents between boys and girls? Of course, certain rules of etiquette obtain in certain classes of society, but there is a mass outside, in the country and small towns, who are not governed by the rules laid down by Madam Grundy. There seems to be a tendency toward expensive gifts among the young people of today. Should a young girl be allowed by her parents to accept gifts other than candy, flowers, music and books from her boy friends? The question often comes up in the homes when some boy, all in good faith, gives the girl friend a bit of expensive jewelry. Some mothers, at once, compel the girl to return the gift and that ends the friendship and causes an embarrassing situation. Of course, there are girls, without conscience or that innate refinement which every good wholesome girl possesses, who just go with a boy for the sake of the gifts lavished upon her.

Now, does the responsibility of indiscriminate giving rest with the parents of the boy or the girl? If the boy was trained by his mother not to offer expensive presents to the girls until Miss Right comes along, it would save many a heartache. If the girl has been properly instructed, could not she, in an unobtrusive way, give the boy to understand that such gifts were not desirable? Indiscriminate giving between boys and girls often causes an innocent friendship to degenerate into mawkish sentimentalism.—The Housekeeper.

No Real Value in Unjust Gains.

Do not make unjust gains; they are equal to a loss.—Hesiod.

The Sargasso Sea

In the middle of the North Atlantic there is an area of comparatively still water almost equal to continental Europe in extent and more or less covered with floating seaweed. It was known as the Mar da Sargaco to Columbus and the early navigators and is the Sargasso sea of modern geographers.

The floating seaweed was formerly supposed to have grown near the Bahama and Florida shores, and to have drifted to its present position. It is now, however, known to grow and propagate itself where it is found. In it are found globular masses of weed containing fish eggs and known as fish nests.

Recent investigations show that the floating weed of the Sargasso sea is the chosen breeding place of species of flying fish.—Field.

The Duluth Herald thinks it was a mean suggestion that Roosevelt postponed his return from April to June just so he wouldn't have Halley's comet to draw away popular attention. It is more likely he was taking pity on the comet.

The latest official report from Halley's comet is that it is in the constellation of the Fish, almost overhead at 6 p. m., invisible to naked eye observers, and not likely to be seen until after it has passed behind the sun on March 24.

The Minnesota editors, on invitation of the irresistible Mary McFadden, have gone on record for women's suffrage. This question is becoming one of importance in this state, and it is rumored that the political conventions will be asked to incorporate a suffrage plank in their platforms. Now is the time for the women to demand their rights—strike while the iron is hot.

Fred Johnson, brother of the late governor, has entered into a contract with a lyceum bureau to deliver sixty lectures at $75 per. Fred has long been recognized by his friends as an orator of exceptional ability, and it is their belief that he will make good in the larger field. There is considerable talk in political circles that Mr. Johnson will be the Democratic candidate for secretary of state in the forthcoming campaign.

The Minnesota supreme court last week decided the reciprocal demurrage law as constitutional, says the Hallock Enterprise. This law provides that the railroads must pay demurrage in case they do not furnish cars asked for shippers within reasonable time. The railroads have always collected demurrage from shippers who did not unload and release cars within a specified time, but the shipper who applied for cars and had to wait days or weeks was given no recompense for his losses from such delay. The decision seems only fair and equitable.

The county option convention to be held at the St. Paul auditorium next Wednesday, March 2, promises to be of greater interest than any political event since the days of the farmers' alliance. The county optionists will demand that the political parties come forward with definite assurances of co-operation and platform pledges. They are tired of evasion, and unless either the Republican or the Democratic party becomes a hostage to their cause they will put an independent state ticket in the field. The temperance people undoubtedly hold the balance of power in state politics, and the possibility of intelligent use of their influence may well cause the cold shivers to run down the backs of the politicians.

When it is shown by official records that the United States in ten years exported $9,000,000,000 worth of agricultural products there can be little doubt as to what country is the world's main reliance for such articles. And now that our exports of manufactures are approaching the same standard and bid fair to surpass it, there likewise can be no doubt of our industrial progress or of the headway we are making in the markets of the earth. How unnecessary and foolish is our present tariff system in view of the fact that it cannot affect the price of agricultural products, and the manufacturers seem to be able to hold their own against the world. The truth is we are taxing ourselves for the purpose of creating millionaires and entrenching trusts and corporations.

PROTECTING A ROBBER TRUST.

In his striking article on the tariff in Human Life for February, Alfred Henry Lewis says:

"When an 'infant industry' gets so big and strong that it climbs the line fence and wallops the neighbor's young ones in those neighbor's own back yards, it hardly needs 'protection.'"

"Come back with me to that question of sugar 'protection.' It was but a few weeks ago when the Sugar Trust put out these illuminating figures. Naming that 2 cents a pound (tariff) grade of sugar, it quoted it for the home market at 4.15 cents a pound, and for exportation at 2.60 cents.

"Here is proof enough of tariff perfidy to hang a man. The Sugar Trust is given 'protection' to the tune of 2 cents a pound. This 'protection' by anticipation of those who drew the bill, will result in less than $120,000 a year to the treasury. As against this, what does it mean to the Trust? Now we come to the Ophir—the real gold mine—in this business. The American public consumes 6,371,578,000 pounds of sugar from New Year to New Year. That 2 cents a pound—a shadow less, in fact—puts over $126,000,000 into the 'protected' pockets of the sugar people. Of this huge rapine the Trust takes the lion's share, while a huddle of little sugar rascals take the jackal's. And every dollar, every dime of that $126,000,000 comes out of the pockets of the public—out of you and me—of the people whose misrepresentatives in Congress assembled have builded the law. Every splinter of that $126,000,000 comes out of us. Which is why we go afoot, or cling to straps, while a Spreckles or a Havemeyer has his yacht or private car. Going now to an average, each family in the land is taxed $8 a year in favor of the Havemeyer and Spreckles families. Who was it said, 'What fools these mortals be!' He must have been looking at a tariff bill."

Red Wing Free Press: It is given out by someone who it is claimed is "next" to Roosevelt's plans that Roosevelt wants no political office for himself, but that he intends to insist on Taft's renomination and election. Roosevelt insisted on the same thing once before and by taking him at his word and electing Taft the peole got completely hunecod. St. Peter Free Press: According to the annual report of the Twin City Rapid Transit company its gross receipts for the past year increased 8.91 per cent and the net revenue 13.66 per cent, and after allowing for heavy appropriations for renewals the net earnings for common stock were 6.45 per cent. The company has $950,000 cash on hand, expected to be invested in new construction. This means an additional source of revenue for the stockholders, without additional capital, but on which patrons of the road are expected to pay the usual interest. That is what is called a fair income on capital invested, and what is held to be just and equitable. Yet under this system a company may double and treble its original capital in a fewl years, entirely at the expense of its patrons, with interest added afterwards. SETTING A TRAP FOR THE GOVERNOR

Speaking For the Party.

But because Governor Eberhart declined to commit himself on county option and indiscreetly at this time made public his reasons why, Mr. Youngdahl subjects to him a violent attack and charges in effect that he has identified himself in the liquor interests. The fact is that the governor merely recognized conditions as they are—that so far as county option is concerned the the Republican party is at sixes and sevens—that whereas an important section of the rank and file of the party favors county option the leaders have made other affiliations with a view to maintaining political supremacy, and are not in a position were they so inclined, to join in the crusade. What else could the governor do if he was really unable to apply an efficient stopper to indiscreet expression except to say that he had no authority to commit the Republican party to the policy which Mr. Youngdahl favored. If Mr. Youngdahl had been more considerate he would have forborne badgering the party's representative whose hands he must have recognized were so tied that he was helpless.

A Minneapolis Candidate.

Sheriff Ege of Minneapolis is still as earnest as ever in his candidacy for the office of Secretary of State. Whether, however, the veteran politician hopes to land, or whether he is merely playing the game to attain ends more remote is still a mooted question. One thing is sure that if the Hennepin county delegation is tied up in the state convention to Mr. Ege it cannot well go elsewhere. On the surface it would appear that that is the end it is sought to attain. Hugh Scott would like to be Auditor. Mr. Iverson's friends are shrewd enough to see that it would be to his interest that the biggest delegation in the convention should not be behind his rival. Of course they support Ege, likewise Hanke. Hanke would like well enough to be state treasurer. Other candidates for treasurer have friends in Minneapolis. Naturally they are willing to spend a little time in the effort to shoo Hanke off.

In the Third District.

Joel Heatwole has been very sick. He is getting better however, though it is probably too much to anticipate that he will be fully well before Easter. It may perhaps not be widely known that Ed Tuttle has been reappointed postmaster at Hastings. Archie Hayes wanted the job. Congressman Davis would have preferred to have given it to him. Hayes had the support of Bill Rich and the federal machine. Dar Reese and the interests he represented pressed his appointment. Archie had been the glad hand man for the Republican State Central committee and the governor, Chairman Brown and the State Capitol crowd were friendly and Archie is popular down in Washington. He is a protegee of Senator Nelson and on good terms with Senator Clapp. Indeed he had reason to expect to be favored if for no other reason than because of the intimate relations subsisting between him and Postmaster General Hitchcock. Naturally he was inclined to refer contemptuously to the opposition to his appointment Heatwole seemed inclined to interpose, and to speak alternately commpassionately and critically of "Joel" himself. Well, Congressman Davis finally concluded not to recommend so popular a man and with all his influence Hayes failed to land the job. Before one concludes to disparage a real political manager it is always best to be dead sure that he is down and out.

St. Paul Politics.

The St. Paul Republicans are always victorious at the beginning of a political campaign and in that way fairly share the honors with the Democrats who wait for their jollification until after the election. They have led this time to the sacrificial altar a most excellent young man, Herbert Keller, who has been a member of the assembly, made a good record and deserves a better fate. The Democratic candidate for mayor is Mr. Haas, who has an equally good record and a reputation for getting more votes. Those in touch with the situation see no reason to anticipate other than the usual result.

The State Prison.

It is said that a more critical examination of the specifications of the new state prison has caused the board of control to modify their plans at least to such an extent as to admit of freer competition. Whoever prepared the specifications in the first place is said to have shown a marked preference at certain Mankato and Kasota quarries in which prominent politicians are interested.

A Closed Incident.

The attorney general is said to have been persuaded not to attempt to recover from Channing Seabury any part of the money illegaly paid him on account of alleged services as capitol commissioner.

PAUL PRY.

The Birdcage.

A prisoner was arraigned before the bar of justice charged with having dallied too long before another sort of bar and waxing too hilarious for the public peace.

"What were you doing drunk in the street?" asked the magistrate.

"Was I drunk?" was the reply in a tone of surprised innocence.

"The policeman says you were."

"Under oath?"

"Certainly."

"Perhaps he's right, but I was just going along with a birdcage in my hand."

"The magistrate had a bottle set before the prisoner.

"Do you call that a birdcage?" he inquired. "That's what you were carrying."

IT WAS AS DRY AS HE WAS.

The prisoner picked it up carefully removed the cork, took a smell and turned it upside down. It was as dry as he was.

"Well," he answered slowly, "it ain't a birdcage now, since them policemen has had a whack at it."

"Probably you are sober now and see things differently."

"That ain't it. It was a birdcage when I had it last."

"Possibly you can explain what you mean by a birdcage," suggested the puzzled court.

"ABOUT A DOZEN SWALLOWS IN IT."

"Easy enough," smiled the prisoner. "It had about a dozen swallows in it when they got it."

Opportunity.

Foolish is he who says that at his door
I knock but once, a furtive moment stay,
Fearing lest he shall hear, then haste away,
Glad to escape him—to return no more.
Not so; I knock and wait and o'er and o'er
Come back to summon him. Day after day
I come to call the idler from his play
Or wake the dreamer with my vain uproar.
Out of a thousand, haply, now and then
One, if he hear again and yet again,
Will tardily rise and open languidly.
The rest, half puzzled, half annoyed, return
To play or sleep nor seek nor wish to learn
Who the untimely, clownish guest may be.

—William H. Eddy in Atlantic.

A Tart Answer.

The Rev. John McNeill was holding a revival service at Cardiff, Wales, and announced that he would answer any question about the Bible. At once a note was sent up to him reading as follows:

"Dear Mr. McNeill—If you are seeking to help young men, kindly tell me who was Cain's wife."

That seemed a poser, and the audience waited with intense interest, tempered with amusement, to see how the good man would extricate himself. After a pause he said:

"I love young men, especially young inquirers for light, and I would give this young man a word of advice. It is this: Don't lose your soul's salvation looking after other people's wives."

The Irishman's Request.

In the days when flogging was in vogue as a punishment in the British navy a Scotchman and an Irishman on the arrival of their ship in harbor obtained leave to go ashore for a couple days, and they overstayed the period of leave granted them. When they did put in an appearance they were ordered fifty lashes each. On the day of the punishment a parade was ordered to witness the infliction of the flogging. When all was ready the Scotchman asked as a favor to be allowed a piece of canvas on his back while he received his flogging. The captain granted his request and, turning to the Irishman, asked him if he required anything on his back while he was being flogged, to which he replied, "If ye plaze, yer honor, I'd loike to have the Scotchman on my back, if ye wouldn't mind."

S.S.S. CURES MALARIA

Malaria is a species of blood poverty known as anaemia. It is a condition in which the circulation is so weak and impure that it is unable to supply the system with sufficient nourishment and strength to preserve ordinary health.

The medical profession is divided in opinion as to the manner in which malarial poison gets into the blood. Some take the position that it is an atmospheric poison, the specific germs of which are breathed into the lungs and thus transmitted to the circulation. Others advance the opinion that persons become inoculated with the poison through the bites of mosquitos. All however agree that MALARIA is a blood affection, and any treatment to successfully overcome it must not only purify this vital fluid, but at the same time add the necessary qualities of richness and strength to the circulation.

The malarial poison destroys large numbers of the rich, red corpuscles of the circulation, and the peculiar paleness of anaemic persons is due to this fact. In the first stages of Malaria there is a bilious condition of the system, constant bodily weakness, poor appetite, and a "no account," tired feeling.

S. S. S. searches out and destroys every particle of malarial infection and builds the blood up to a healthy, nourishing condition. Then the system receives its required nutriment, the bright red corpuscles begin to multiply in the circulation, sallow complexions grow ruddy and flushed with health, the liver and digestion are righted, the appetite improved, and the system vitalized and refreshed in every way. S.S.S. is a safe and pleasant remedy as well as an efficient one. If you have Malaria we will be glad to have you write us describing the case. We will send free our book on the blood and at the same time our physicians will give you some medical advice that will be of great service to you in curing yourself with S. S. S. No charge for the book or advice.

A PHYSICAL WRECK.

During 1900 I was running a farm on the Mississippi River, and became so impregnated with malaria that for a year afterwords I was a physical wreck. I took a number of medicines recommended as blood purifiers, chill cures and malaria eradicators, but nothing did me any good until I began to use S.S.S., which I did about a year ago. The result was that after taking several bottles of the large size I was as well and strong as I ever was, and have never had a chill since. I expect to take S.S.S. every year as a preventive, and would advise everybody else to follow my example.

Their Meeting Place.

The lady dean of a well known girls' college, being very much annoyed that the girls after chapel on Sunday mornings waited around the entrance of the assembly room and stood in groups on the stairs instead of dispersing at once, resolved to institute a reform. So at the regular chapel service one morning she arose with much dignity and made the following remarks:

"I have noticed a growing tendency among you young women to linger about the chapel Sunday mornings, blocking the halls and stairs. I desire after the following order will be preserved in leaving chapel: First the president will pass away, then I will pass away, then the faculty members will pass away, and finally the student body by classes will pass away, and we will all meet below"—

She never finished her sentence.

Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Fournier of Red Lake attended mass et Terrebonne last Sunday.

Miss Fabiola Dubue of Brooks was a Terrebonne callar Sunday.

Thief River Falls.

From the News and Press.

Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Enright of Red Lake Falls were guests of Mr. and Mrs. P. W. Roark the first of the week.

There are rumors about town, and we believe well founded, that Grygla will shortly have a state bank. If the projected Soo branch passes thru that point she will have a railroad, and it will not be long before Eastern Marshall county will rise into prominence.

Oliver Fosbeck came down from Roosevelt Wednesday, where he has been working in the woods the past few months. Some two weeks ago he accidentally cut his knee and after waiting in vain for it to heal came here for surgical treatment. Dr. Gambell found the member in a very bad poisoned condition. While he entertains hopes of saving the limb yet he fears it may remain more or less stiff for life.

ST. HILAIRE.

From the Spectator—

Miss Mary Auderson, who teaches at Viking, has been home two weeks, the school in her district having been closed on account of diptheria. She left Saturday morning to resume her school duties.

J. E. Draeger was taken ill with measles last week and has been confined to his room at Hotel Markham. He has been very sick, but is improving rapidly now, which is good news to his many friends. His sister, Miss Marie Draeger, is here from Wylie to attend him during his illness.

C. R. Hill of Aurora, Minn., a brother-in-law of John Larson of the town of Mayfield, was in the village this week and closed a deal for 160 acres of L. T. Berg's farm on the reservation. The consideration was $3,000. Mr. Hill is in the hotel business at Aurora, a village on the Mesabe range.

Might Come In Handy.

A charming Louisville girl, the daughter of a minister, has always been famed for her habit of saving things because they may come in handy, and last summer the family told a story on her which she would give a good deal to suppress. She had been away at White Sulphur Springs and, being especially popular, had become the recipient of such a variety of souvenirs that before coming home she sent one trunk ahead in which she put many of the various trinkets for her smaller brothers and sisters and some summer frocks which had become too faded for wear. Her mother industriously unpacked the trunk and finally, when reaching the bottom, was transfixed to find several hundred poker chips and about half a dozen decks of cards. When her horrified father later demanded an explanation the daughter quite innocently and unconsciously said:

"Why, father, they were left in the room I was occupying by some former occupant, and I just took them because I thought they might come in handy."

And even the minister smiled at her explanation.—Louisville Times.

And homely joys disdain,
Good Uncle William does not scowl,
Or join in the refrain.

Says cheerful Uncle Bill.

I guess we always will."

THE MISSING INGREDIENT.

An Inventor Left His Secret Guarded Well.

By EVELYN WITWOTH.

[Copyright, 1919, by American Press Association.]

"Oh, father, I'm afraid that some day you'll blow yourself up."

"Never fear, sweetheart! There is but one thing combustible about these ingredients, and that I never put in till the last. And it must have been mixed with the others an hour before there can be an explosion."

This dialogue occurred in old Severance's laboratory between him and his daughter Fanny. She was his only child, and he had no wife, so that, being all he had to love in the world, she was his idol.

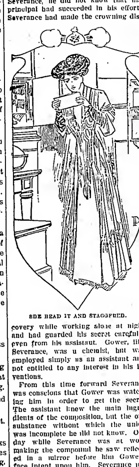
"Father," she said, changing the subject abruptly, "Will has spoken." She threw her arms about his neck and hid her face in his bosom.

"Has he, chick? I'm glad—for your sake, dearie—but for me"— He finished with a deep sigh.

"Oh, father, I will never leave you! We will always be together."

"Daughter," said the old man, "I, too, have something of importance to tell you. I have discovered a fulminate powder that will revolutionize warfare. It will treble the range of a cannon or a rifle. I have been offered $100,000 by the government for my secret. Now that Will has spoken you may tell him that you will have a fortune for a dowry. He is a fine fellow and deserves it and you."

Peter Gower, a man of thirty-five, whom Severance used for an assistant, was eavesdropping outside the door and heard every word of the conversation. Although he had worked with Severance, he did not know that his principal had succeeded in his effort. Severance had made the crowning discovery while working alone at night and had guarded his secret carefully even from his assistant. Gower, like Severance, was a chemist, but was employed simply as an assistant and not entitled to any interest in his inventions.



SHE READ IT AND STAGGERED.

From this time forward Severance was conscious that Gower was watching him in order to get the secret. The assistant knew the main ingredients of the composition, but the one substance without which the union was incomplete he did not know. One day while Severance was at work making the compound he saw reflected in a mirror before him Gower's face intent upon him. Severance put in all the ingredients, substituting for the uniting substance another than the correct one. An expression of joy came over the face in the mirror.

After this Severance conceived a dread of his assistant. One day he gave his daughter a bit of paper with a single word written on it and told her to put it away in a little trinket box she had and to be extremely careful as to its preservation.

One day Fanny Severance was startled by the sound of an explosion in the laboratory. Every drop of blood left her face instantly. Rushing into the laboratory, her worst fears were realized. Her father's body was lying on the floor so disfigured that he was scarcely recognizable. Gower followed her. He was pale and trembling.

"I've been fearing this for a long while," he said.

But the girl did not hear him. She had swooned. He carried her into the house and ministered to her till she came back to consciousness. Then he left her.

Fanny Severance and William Clarke, her fiance, found themselves thus unexpectedly cut off from the dowry they had expected at their wedding. But the young man showed no disappointment to the girl he loved, and they were married soon after her father's death.

Gower put the laboratory in order shut it up and gave Fanny the key. She saw no more of him till soon after her wedding. Then he called ostensibly to learn of her welfare, but really to see if he could get from her a bit of secret information. He had put together the chemicals necessary to the compound Severance had invented, had put in the uniting substance he had seen Severance use, but notwithstanding that he had tried every known percussion substance he had never been able to get an explosion. Recognizing that he had been foiled and that a fortune had slipped through his fingers, he was about to accept the situation when it occurred to him that Severance might have left his secret with his daughter. After making formal inquiries he told her that her father had given him all the elements of his compound but one. If he had left her the name of this uniting chemical she might yet be rich, for he (Gower), having all the rest, with this could manufacture the powder.

When her husband came home that evening Fanny told him of Gower's call and what he had said. Later on, going to her trinket box, she noticed the paper her father had given her. Taking it to her husband, she told him of the circumstance attending her receiving it and asked him if he knew what it meant. The young man looked at the word written on the paper. It was a curious mixture of letters, spelling an almost unpronounceable word. Then suddenly an idea occurred to him. He told his wife that it might be the crowning chemical used by her father for his compound.

"Then," said Fanny excitedly, "all we have to do is to give it to Mr. Gower and we will yet be rich."

But William Clarke believed in the adage "Make haste slowly." He slept but little that night, thinking why, if this was the required substance, Severance had left it without the other ingredients of the compound. He must have had a reason for doing so Clarke thought for hours upon this reason. Was it that Gower knew the other ingredients and in the event of the inventor's death could go on with the manufacture of the powder in case Fanny would give it to him. If so it meant that Fanny was the real possessor of the secret. But why had not Severance told her that what he had given her was the key and what she was to do with it in case of his death?

"Fanny," said the young husband the next morning, giving her the daily parting kiss, "go into the laboratory today and see what you can find there."

Fanny took the key to the building and, with a shudder, going into the laboratory, began to hunt—what for she did not know. There was a tiny safe in the wall that interested her. Remembering that she had father's keys in the house, she went for them and, picking out an odd looking one, slipped it into the lock. It fitted exactly, and, turning it, she opened the small door and took out several papers. Selecting one, she read it and staggered as if stricken. It read:

> Suspecting that my assistant, Peter Gower, will murder me (he thinks he possesses my secret) I leave this paper in case anything happens to me. I dare not give the secret to any one, even to my daughter, now, but trust this action will insure it to her without the risk that would occur if it left my keeping.

On another paper was a list of the ingredients except one, which the writer said he had given to his daughter.

A horrible thought entered the young wife's mind. Her father had probably been murdered.

"Bless him!" she exclaimed, kissing the record he had made. "Had it not been for his care a murderer would have robbed me of my rights."

The hours dragged slowly till her husband came home, and she told him of her discovery. He read the paper and, taking his wife in his arms, said:

"Sweetheart, it is our duty to avenge your father."

"How?"

"There are ways in which Gower could have contrived an explosion. He might have mixed substances that would require a few minutes or a few hours to unite chemically. He might have run a wire underground to the outside of the laboratory and ignited some substance within by an electric spark. He might have tossed a bomb at his victim's feet. Whatever his means, he doubtless removed all evidences of its character, for you left him to lock up the laboratory."

"So I did," she said wonderingly. "But could I have done otherwise? I wouldn't have gone there myself on any account."

The next day Clarke took steps to renew the negotiations with the government broken off by his father-in-law's death. The matter dragged, as all matters connected with governments are bound to drag. But Clarke, who had more business ability than the inventor, started negotiations with another country and before long had two nations bidding against each other. The result was that he finally received five times as much as was offered Severance.

When payment was handed to Clarke it was in one check on the national treasury. He took it home and waved it triumphantly over his wife's head, exclaiming:

"There's your dowry!"

But the wife's joy was subdued by the sad memory of her father's death. "Alas, poor father!" she said, with tears in her eyes.

The next day Clarke did the more melancholy duty of handing the police the paper incriminating Peter Gower. A warrant was issued for his arrest and as soon as he was taken an investigation of the laboratory was made. A tiny hole was found under a work bench through which a wire might have been passed to the cellar. To lead it from there to the outside of the building no other hole was needed since it could have been passed through a window. This single hole was the only evidence against the accused, and it was not sufficient to convict him. He was acquitted of the murder by the jury, but not by the public. When freed he disappeared and has never since been heard from.

A Difference In Time.

A traveler in Ireland, riding a horse that had seen better days, stopped on a country road in Donegal and asked a peasant:

"How far is it to Letterkenny?"

Now, every true Irishman, gentle or simple, is a born sportsman and has a keen appreciation of the points of a good horse. So, after surveying the sorry steed with the eye of a connoisseur, the rustic replied slowly:

"That depends."

"How depends? Depends on what?" asked the traveler impatiently.

"Well," returned Pat in the same measured tones, "ye see, sor, wid a decent horse it's a matther av five mile or so; wid that quare baste av yours it's fully tin. But"—with a sudden burst of energy—"if it wae wan av Major Doyle's blood mares ye'd be there now!"

COMIC VALENTINES PAST and PRESENT

by WALDON FAWCETT

[illegible] OF OLD VALENTINES

ONE OF THE EARLIEST OF COMIC VALENTINES—OLD CHATTERBOX

Photographs Copyrighted by WALDON FAWCETT

T[illegible] rather [illegible] historical [illegible] on the subject [illegible] to indicate that comic valentines did not make their appearance quite as early as the [illegible] and sentimental [illegible]—but it is evident [illegible] souvenirs [illegible] for [illegible] the poetic [illegible] of flowers and lace [illegible] fading popular favor [illegible] the whole principle of the exchange or distribution of comic valentines has been [illegible] one important essential from the dispatch of the [illegible]. In the case of the [illegible] sentimental tokens of St. Valentine the sender is usually [illegible] anxious that the recipient shall suspect his identity. In the case of the comics, on the other hand, every precaution is [illegible] taken to keep the origin of the [illegible] a profound secret.

In the [illegible] of both classes of valentines—the sentimental and the [illegible]—the earliest manufactured valentines—those of more than a century ago—were preceded by home-made valentines which had vogue during a considerable era. So general was the exchange of these home-made valentines that [illegible] in the form of "Valentine Writers" or books of appropriate verse were regularly published for the inspiration of young people who desired to prepare such epistles, just as [illegible] of ready-prepared letters yet find some sale among [illegible] youths of little imagination who desire to appear to the best advantage as sentimental correspondents. Most of the "valentine writers" were designed for the sentimental section of the public, but there were some prepared especially for the scribblers with a sense of humor.

For instance, there was published along about the last of the eighteenth century "The Quizzical or Satirical Valentine Writer," the character of which may well be surmised from the title. This, alike to most others of its kind, became an annual publication and was looked forward to each year just as the appearance of the almanac for the new year was anticipated with keen interest. Another of these forerunners of our present-day comic valentines was published in London during the same period and bore the highly significant title "Hymen's Revenge Against Old Maids, Old Bachelors and Impertinent Coxcombs; or a New Valentine Writer, Being a Collection of Valentines, Humorous and Satirical, chiefly original, written expressly for this work."

Some idea of the caustic ammunition provided by these helpers of the composers of valentines may be formed from the following specimen verse addressed "To a Lady Who Squints:"

[illegible] most delight,
[illegible] convenient sight,
[illegible]
[illegible] on either side.

One of the most novel features of the beginnings of the comic valentine craze was the appearance of tradespeople's valentine writers containing all sorts of verse especially designed to apply to devotees of the various vocations and lines of mercantile trade. Such a reference work made a good sized volume, for, in order to be complete it had to embody verses for every [illegible] trade and occupation. There were [illegible] sentimental tributes included in each volume of this character, but for the most part the contents consisted of more or less humorous reference.

The system was certainly a convenient one, for not only were gibes and appeals provided, but there was also appended favorable and unfavorable replies for each such advance, so that the recipient of one of the valentines thus derived had only to consult the book in order to ascertain the proper reply. For instance, a grocer could address his lady love as follows:

Your breath is all spice I declare,
And [illegible] and [illegible],
That you're as sweet, I think, my fair,
As plums or sugar candy.
[illegible] I [illegible],
[illegible] kindly weigh;
And if you will my heart restore,
I'll treat you to some tea.

However, the lovelorn grocer was liable to reply to this effect:

Your letter I've weighed,
And truly afraid
Many pounds you're deficient in weight;
And so Mr. Grocer,
I'd have you know, Sir,
I care not a fig for your treat.

With the introduction of manufactured valentines the comics kept pace with the sentimental variety. Among the earliest and most interesting of the humorous products of the early valentine manufacturers were transformation pictures, which conveyed hidden or double meaning. A notable example was the design which presented at first glance the figure of an attractive and fashionably gowned women. However, the pulling of a string changed the whole aspect of the picture in that the head of the woman was suddenly replaced by that of a parrot. Later the manufacturers of comic valentines struck what might be termed the standard form of grotesque, highly colored caricatures which has endured to this day with only such changes as have been dictated from time to time by the edicts of fashion in dress, etc.

With the decreasing cost of the comic valentines—the small boy can now buy as many as ten for a cent—there use has grown and our public men and celebrities, from the president, all down the ladder, are now likely to be deluged each February with more or less pertinent reminders of the jokers' day. Germany and Japan have manufactured many valentines, but American lithographic houses are gradually capturing most of the business and there are now several men in the United States who devote practically their entire time to preparing designs for comic valentines.

AWAITING THE DISTRIBUTION OF THE VALENTINES

DANGERS IN DANCING.

Dancing has been extolled as a healthful recreation; as a means of physical culture it favors the development of the muscular system and promotes health and cheerfulness.

Young girls appear to experience no fatigue after it. They will not miss a single waltz, polka or square dance, but if the pulse of one of these indefatigable devotees is felt after the dance is finished it will be found in the majority of cases that the number of pulsations is far in excess of the normal, and from this it may be inferred that the condition of the heart must react prejudicially upon the entire organism, and it justifies an apprehension of danger to delicate girls.

Robin Redbreast's Valentine

A girl and a boy wandered forth into a fair, pleasant garden that looked like fairyland, although it was wintry weather.

Suddenly the girl spoke.

"I wish St. Valentine had had the snowdrop instead of the crocus dedicated to him."

And as she spoke she knelt down and, raising one of the white, drooping flowers, she gazed lovingly at its pure white petals and at the delicate green tracery of the leaves of its inner cup.

"Ah!" said she, "what have you been waiting for so long?

"Under the snow, under the snow,
With your ivory heads all bending low,
How many secrets you must know!

The boy looked at her wonderingly.

"How can the flowers know anything?" he asked.

"Everything knows something," returned Leila, dreamily; "but the flowers are dumb and cannot tell one their thoughts—only their beauty speaks, and their fragrance breathes sweet thoughts into one's heart that one tries to put into words. But that is almost impossible."

"Of course it is," answered her companion. "Now, it is quite different with the birds; they can make themselves understood. They sing songs of thanksgiving and their note of joy or mourning is easy to tell. They scold and chatter as the jackdaw and rook, or screech like the owl, or sing a serenade as the nightingale. And one of them speaks even more clearly, for when he cries 'cuckoo, cuckoo,' we know that the summer is coming. No wonder St. Valentine cared for the birds, and you see that they are all fluttering out and singing a joyful song in honor of his birthday."

"Yes," said Leila, softly—

The birds in spring
Sweet chorus sing
To good St. Valentine.

"See, there are two sitting on a bough whispering to each other of the spring and summer days and all that is going to happen; where they shall live and how they shall build their nests. And there are two more flying toward them and two more—always in pairs. Ah! that is because on Valentine's day each bird chooses its mate."

"Of course," answered the boy.

"And the snowdrops are nodding their heads, as if they were keeping time to the birds' song," continued Leila. "Doubtless they have been waiting to do honor to St. Valentine. They have been lying patiently under the snow and now that the warmer day has come they are saying, 'We belong to the wreath that the flowers weave for Valentine's day.'"

WHY WE GIVE VALENTINES.

Long ago there lived a priest named Valentine. This good man was noted in all the country round for his kindness. He nursed the sick, comforted the sorrowing and was always ready to give help to anyone who was in need. Valentine dearly loved the children and those who went to him for food or clothes were never turned away. After this kind priest became too old to go among his people he was very sad because he thought he could no longer be of any help to them. Then he remembered that he could write loving messages to the sick and sorrowing. Soon his friends began to watch for the kind words that were sure to come whenever sorrow or joy entered their homes. Even little children would say, when they were sick "I think Father Valentine will send me a letter to-day."

But after a time no more letters were received and soon the news went abroad that good old Valentine was dead. Then every one said that such a man was good enough to be called a saint and since then he has been known as St. Valentine. It was not long until people celebrated his birthday by sending loving messages to their friends. The notes and letters containing these messages were called valentines. This all happened years ago, but good St. Valentine is still remembered on the fourteenth of each February.

SAYS DAD.

THE STORY OF APSLEY HOUSE

Land on Which It Stands Once Gift of Monarch to Poor Companion in Arms.

It may be said that Apsley House, the duke of Wellington's mansion at Hyde Park Corner, in London, is doubly a soldier's reward. King George II. was always pleased to meet with any one who remembered that he had fought at the battle of Dettingeo, and one day when riding near Hyde Park he was saluted by a poor man walking at the roadside.

The king thought his face was familiar, and, on making inquiries, was gratified to find that he had been an humble comrade in the well-known battle. Noticing the man's condition, he asked if he could render him any service.

"Sire," replied the old soldier, "my wife and I secure a livelihood by keeping yonder apple stall. If the ground on which it stands could be ours, we should indeed be in better case."

It was not a very extravagant request, and the king granted it. Since then the value of land near Hyde Park has increased, and the old soldier's son received as much as £450 a year for the ground when a certain rich man chose the spot on which the apple stall had stood as a suitable place to erect a stately mansion. This mansion was afterward presented to the duke of Wellington as a token of the nation's gratitude.

Substitute for Gold.

In France a substitute for gold has been afforded by combining 94 parts of copper and six parts of antimony and adding a little magnesium carbonate to increase the weight. It is said that this alloy can be drawn, wrought and soldered much like true gold, and that it also receives and retains a golden polish. It is worth about 25 cents a pound.

The KITCHEN CABINET

NOTHING is small that can be done from a mighty motive. The least action of life can be as surely done from the loftiest motive as the highest and noblest. Faithfulness measures acts as God measures them. True conscienciousness deals with our duties as God deals with them."—Dr. MacLaren.

The Cocktail.

As a beginning to a course dinner, the alcoholic cocktail is under the ban, not only temperance people but also those who understand the art of delicate dining. When rum, whisky and other pungent flavor beverages are used their pungent flavor destroys the appetizing effect of the hors d'oeuvres and seriously retard the process of digestion. On this account the clam, the oyster, the various fruit cocktails and those of appetizing herbs are used, their object being to stimulate, but not to clog the appetite. The gustatory nerves are extremely sensitive and if abused by too highly-seasoned foods lose the power to appreciate the more delicate and flowerlike flavors which it should be our pleasure to enjoy.

Oyster Cocktails for Twelve.

Clean and chill 60 small oysters; mix with three teaspoons of horseradish, one teaspoon of tabasco sauce, two tablespoonfuls of vinegar, five tablespoonfuls of Worcestershire sauce, three tablespoonfuls of tomato catsup and one and one-fourth teaspooonfuls of salt. Serve in glasses, in grape fruit, lemon or tomato cups.

Tutti Frutti Cocktail.

Put into each glass a spoonful of chipped ice, and on this arrange a layer of chilled fruit, such as a tablespoonful of shredded orange pulp with a little of the juice, teaspoonful of cubes of pineapple, small pieces of banana, preserved or fresh cherries, seeded grapes or any fruit in season. Sift over all a tablespoonful crushed loaf sugar and fill the glass with grape juice and pineapple juice.

Oyster Cocktail Sauces.

Use one or two teaspoonfuls of these sauces on from four to eight small oysters for each glass. One teaspoonful each of grated horseradish and tomato catsup, a saltspoonful each of salt and cayenne. One-half teaspoon of tabasco sauce, two tablespoonfuls of lemon juice. Mix thoroughly before serving. Oysters and sauces should be well chilled when served.

THE art of cooking, like the art of dining, is exempt from the caprices of fashion. The principles of both these arts are eternal and immutable."—P. Z. Didsbury.

Historic English Recipes.

In England each county glories in certain dishes which must be eaten just there to be appreciated. The Bath bun, Shrewsbury cakes, Yorkshire pudding, Banbury tarts and any number of dishes that have become famous. The average American goes, sees, eats and pronounces them heavy and sticky, but consoles himself with the thought that they are historic. Good bread making is not said to be an accomplishment of the English cook, but the muffin or crumpet and tea cakes are worth trying.

The great fault with the English soups such as ox-tail and mulligatawny is their strength and heaviness. To begin a dinner with any of these soups as they are served in large portion shows active digestive powers, but lack of knowledge as to the real mission of soup in a meal.

A breakfast menu recommended for August is one that would not find favor with us. Bloaters on toast, corned beef, muffins, brown and white bread and butter, marmalade and boiled hominy. Olive Green says: "An American who ate a breakfast like that in August probably would not send his collars to the laundry more than once or twice more."

Devonshire Cream.

This is an old recipe which is famous in London. Allow milk to stand 24 hours in winter, 12 in summer and then brought just to the boiling point, not to boil, however. The slower it is heated the better. It is then set away until the following day, when it is skimmed and it is then known as clotted cream. It has a characteristic and delicious flavor.

Banbury Tarts.

Stone and chop one cupful of raisins, add one cupful of sugar, one egg slightly beaten, one cracker finely rolled and the juice and rind of one lemon. Roll some pastry one-eighth of an inch thick and cut in pieces three and one-half by three inches wide. Put two teaspoonfuls of the mixture on each piece, moisten the edge with cold water, half way around, fold over and press the edges together with a fork dipped in flour. Bake 20 minutes.

Coat Too Much Like Heather.

The coat of a red setter normally stands out fairly clearly against heather of the ordinary hue; when, however, it gets soaked with rain it darkens very much and blends very closely with the heather. The Gordon setters are, perhaps, the worst in this regard of assimilating with the color of heather, and so being liable to get a charge of shot.—Country Life.

His Last Journey.

CHICAGO MERCHANT MAKES STATEMENT.

After Spending Thousands of Dollars and Consulting the Most Eminent Physicians, He Was Desperate.

CHICAGO, ILLS.—Mr. J. G. Becker, of 134 Van Buren St., a well-known wholesale dry goods dealer, states as follows:

"I have had catarrh for more than thirty years. Have tried everything on earth and spent thousands of dollars for other medicines and with physicians, without getting any lasting relief, and can say to you that I have found Peruna the only remedy that has cured me permanently.

"Peruna has also cured my wife of catarrh. She always keeps it in the house for an attack of cold, which it invariably cures in a very short time."

"Do you believe there is anything in mental suggestion?"

"Not a thing."

"Don't you think it is possible if one person keeps his mind steadily fixed on a certain thing which he wishes another to do that the other will be influenced so that he will eventually do it?"

"No, I don't believe in the theory at all. I've been wishing for a week that you'd pay me what you owe me without making it necessary for me to ask you for it."—Sunday Magazine of the Cleveland Leader.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

What the Doctor Did.

Gustave Ullyatt has a little daughter who hasn't been well recently. The other day a physician was called to the Ullyatt home to see her. He examined the child with the aid of a stethoscope. When her father came home that evening he asked what the doctor had said.

"Nothin'," replied the little girl.

"What did he do?" asked Mr. Ullyatt.

"He just telephoned me all over," was the child's reply.—Denver Post.

ANGRY PROTEST OF BOYHOOD

"Valentine Night-Gown" Offended Sensibilities of Small Masculine Humanity.

William, a little country boy of six, was snowbound with his mother at the house of an aunt, 20 miles from his own home. The two, who had driven over in a sleigh just to spend the day, were forced to remain three nights, and were supplied by the hostess with garments to sleep in. There being no small boys in his aunt's family, William was put to bed in one of his little cousin Deborah's nightgowns, very indignant at having to wear anything with so many frills and lace trimmings around the neck and on the sleeves.

"I won't stand it, mummer," he loudly protested on the second night, "I won't wear anything so girly! I'll run away, you see if I don't, and perrush in a snow drift before I'll put that thing on again. Why, rather than wear that—that valentine night-gown—I'll sleep raw!"

Young America.

The H.'s lived in the country, kept chickens and lived the simple life. One of their daily diversions was to sit on the front veranda and watch the sunset and Roberta, aged four, sat and watched with them, but it was a rather tedious as well as solemn occasion for her and one day, after watching in silence for quite a while, an explanation of the whole thing suddenly dawned upon her and with the delighted enthusiasm of a discoverer she exclaimed: "Oh, mamma, I know now why it takes the sun so long to set. It has to hatch out so many little stars!"—Los Angeles Times.

Sometimes, Tommy.

The title of this dialogue might be "Why Papa Believes in Corporal Punishment:"

"Papa?"

"Well?"

"Is there a Christian flea?"

"Why, what on earth ever put that idea in your head?"

"The preacher read it today from the Bible, 'The wicked flee when no man pursueth.'"

"Why, Tommy, that means that the wicked men flee"—

"Then, papa, is there a wicked woman flea?"

"No, no. It means that the wicked flees, runs away."

"Why do they run?"

"Who?"

"The wicked fleas."

"No, no! Don't you see? The wicked man runs away when no man is after him."

"Is there a woman after him?"

"Tommy, go to bed!"

AGE CAME QUICKLY.

For It Must Have Seemed a Long Time Between Drinks.

This story has to do with the captivity of Governor Isham G. Harris and Senator Bate of Tennessee in the penitentiary at Nashville as prisoners of war during the sixties. After an unaccustomed period of abstinence, somewhat longer than that preserved by the governors of North and South Carolina, the governor and the senator cast about for a means to the alleviation of their consuming thirst. In the course of time an old coffeepot and other necessities fell into their hands, and from their rations they managed to save out a little corn now and then.

From this point it is as well to let Huntsman tell the story in the words of Governor Harris:

"'Well, seh, we made three quahts of the finest whisky yo' eveh sampled. But what do yo' think, seh? One of the inhuman gyards, seh, found two of them wheah we had secreted them an' took them from us at the p'int of his bay'nit, seh!'

"'And what did you do with the other quart?' Huntsman asked.

"'We aged it and drank it, seh,' said the governor.

"'How long did you age it, governor?' said Huntsman.

"'Fo' days,' was the dignified response."—Louisville Times.

The accompanists were Miss Mae Moreau and Miss Cora Paul.

At a meeting of the directors of the Red Lake Falls creamery association held Tuesday afternoon, P. L. Malvin was engaged as buttermaker for another year at an increase in salary. The members of the board exercised good business judgment in deciding to keep Mr. Malvin on the job. He has done great work for the local creamery. Under his management the patronage has increased and the creamery's product commands the top market price. Mr. Malvin has given much more in good service than the increase in salary will cost the patrons. The Gazette is glad that Mr. Malvin's good work is appreciated.

A Living Emetic.

A servant who did not find her way very promptly to the kitchen one morning was visited by her mistress, who found her in bed suffering from pain and violent sickness. She explained that she had a cold and had taken some medicine which had been recommended for the children.

"How much did you take?" asked her mistress.

"Well, mum, I went by the directions on the bottle. They said, 'Ten drops for an infant, thirty drops for an adult and a tablespoonful for an emetic.' I knew I wasn't an infant or adult, so I thought I must be an emetic, and the pesky stuff has pretty nigh turned me inside out."

The Irishman's Request.

In the days when flogging was in vogue as a punishment in the British navy a Scotchman and an Irishman on the arrival of their ship in harbor obtained leave to go ashore for a couple days, and they overstayed the period of leave granted them. When they did put in an appearance they were ordered fifty lashes each. On the day of the punishment a parade was ordered to witness the infliction of the flogging. When all was ready the Scotchman asked as a favor to be allowed a piece of canvas on his back while he received his flogging. The captain granted his request and, turning to the Irishman, asked him if he required anything on his back while he was being flogged, to which he replied, "If ye plaze yer honor, I'd loike to have the Scotchman on my back, if ye wouldn't mind."

TWO YOUNG MEN KILLED IN WOODS

Emile Clement of Terrebonne Was Killed by a Falling Tree.

Leon Champagne of Brooks Accidentally Killed at Northome.

Two young men who were residents of Red Lake county and who were employed in the woods this winter, have been killed during the week, death in both cases being due to accidents while the young men were employed at their work.

Emile Clement of Terrebonne while employed in the woods near Bemidji was killed by being struck by a falling tree. The remains were brought to this city Monday and taken to the home at Terrebonne. The funeral was held at Terrebonne Tuesday, Feb. 22, Rev. Fr. Veilleux officiating. Deceased was twenty-four years old. He was a son of the late John Clement and a brother of Napoleon Clement of Terrebonne.

Leon Champagne of Brooks, who has been employed in the woods near Northome, Minn., this winter, was killed Monday morning. The young man was employed with others loading cars when he was struck by a log and received injuries that resulted in his death. The young man was twenty-two years old and was the son of Mr. and Mrs. Peter Champagne of Brooks. The remains were brought to Brooks today and the funeral will be held tomorrow.

BRING IN THE GRAINS

Red Lake County to Have Exhibit at Conservation Congress in St. Paul.

Farmers are again urged to bring in samples of best grains to be used in a Red Lake county exhibit to be made at the conservation congress to be held in St. Paul next month. A small quantity, not more than a quart, of any kind of grain is sufficient. Leave grains with any of the land men.

Flax seed for sale—First quality, grown on ground in clover six years and free of foul weeds. If spoken for soon, $2.25 per bushel will buy this good yielding flax.—Walter Columbus, Red Lake Falls, Minn. M25

Peat in Minnesota.

This state has ten times as much peat as Ireland and Scotland combined, yet for a century these two countries in Europe have been famous the world over for their deposits of peat. One of the features of the coming Conservation and Agricultural Development Congress in St. Paul, will be an address by Max Tolz, a consulting engineer, who will speak on "Peat an Inexhaustable Fuel Resource of Minnesota" This address will be given on the evening of March 16th the first day of the congress, and will alone be worth a trip to St. Paul. Mr. Tolz will not only tell where peat is but how to get it out and utilize it for fuel. The saving to farmers will be tremendous when this material is used as lignite coal is used in North Dakota and Montana.

Homestead Land in Minnesota.

Gov. Eberhart calls attention to the fact that Minnesota contains thousands of acres of land subject to homestead entry, and the immigrant commissioner backs him up by quoting figures as follows:

Koochiching, 367,700 acres; Lake 82,000; Cook 75,000; St. Louis 122,000; Aitkin 1,900; Cass 262,000; Itasca 24,000; Kittson 9,254; Red Lake 3,928; Roseau 247,000, others scattering but making a total of 1,540,000 acres of which 1,262,955 acres have been surveyed.

Fire Loss in 1909.

Fire losses paid by insurance companies in Minnesota for the year approximate a total of $4,000,000, an average of over $333,000 each month. These figures represent actual loss, the insurance serving only to distribute that loss. In addition to this property loss, there is the loss of life resulting from fires, and the greater part of this waste of life and property is due to carelessness.

Among the most prolific causes of fire are:

Carelessness in the use of gasoline.

Overheated stoves and furnaces.

Defective electric wiring.

These causes are always preventable by the exercise of a reasonable amount of care and supervision.

[Any one can see that this story was written by a horrid old bachelor.]

My chum, Henry Burbank, and I courted the girls we married at the same time and married within a week of each other. As soon as we had returned from our wedding trips we met for a supper and a chat.

"Well, Harry," I said, "is your honeymoon over, or is it going to last forever?"

"I've learned just enough about working in double harness to realize that it requires adroitness to trot smoothly together."

"So have I."

"My wife seems to want to have her own way about every little thing."

"Same here."

"On our wedding trip if I proposed to go fishing she wanted that we should play tennis. If I wished to take an afternoon siesta she insisted on going to ride."

"Well, what are you going to do about it?"

"I don't know—grin and bear it, I suppose. How are you making out?"

"Well, I don't have exactly the same trouble that you have. My wife is different. If we differ about anything she always argues and argues, and I can't stop her. If I say, 'It's not a matter of any importance; let's stop talking about it,' she says, 'I want to say just one more thing,' and she says it."

"A great many times?"

"Yes."

The next summer my wife went to the country, and I, not being able to get away, stayed at home. I dined frequently with Harry and his wife. At the first dinner I took with them the subject of people keeping pet dogs in the city came up, and I was surprised to hear Harry inveigh against the practice.

"Why, I thought you loved dogs in your bachelor days," I remarked.

"Hate 'em."

"Upon my word! Did you bring about this change, Mrs. Burbank?" I asked.

"Oh, no! I like dogs. I like all animals."

At that moment a little skye terrier ran into the room and jumped up on to Harry's lap. Harry ordered him down harshly.

"I want you to come round, Tom," said Harry, "when my wife's sisters come. They're going to make us a visit. I'm looking forward to their coming with a great deal of pleasure. Lovely girls, both of 'em."

"That must be very nice for you, Mrs. Burbank," I remarked.

"Well, I'd like it if we had plenty of room and more servants and all that. Harry's got it into his head that he wants them to come. He thinks it lonely here—no one in the house with him but me. I give in to him in everything, but for once I'm going to have my own way."

I looked at Harry and thought I saw a strange look in his eyes.

"You see how I have my way," he said, addressing me. "My wife has an aunt—dearest old lady you ever met; poor woman, hasn't any home. I want her to come here and make a home with us."

"Now, Harry, you're giving an entirely wrong impression. Aunt Martha is old and irritable. She needs to run her own establishment. She would not be happy here at all. No home! Why, she has a very comfortable home—a small flat of five rooms."

"And not a soul in 'em," snapped Harry, "except herself. It must be awful lonely."

When coffee was served Mrs. Burbank left us while we smoked. She had no sooner gone than the skye terrier jumped into his master's lap, and Harry petted him as if he were a spoiled child.

"Why, Harry," I exclaimed, "I thought you hated the little beast!"

"Don't you give me away, old man. If I didn't make believe I hated him he wouldn't be here. You see, I've learned something since I've been married. I keep a sharp lookout, and if I see anything coming I don't like I just veer right round on to that side, and the harder I blow for it the more determined Doll is that it shan't come off. She has two horrid old maid sisters that she's been thinking of asking to come for a visit. See the way I headed her off?"

"Oh, that's your game, is it?"

"And the old aunt—if she came here there wouldn't be any use having any vinegar on the table. She'd turn milk sour. She'd bring on a divorce between Doll and me within a week. The first thing I knew one day Doll began to talk about her aunt and how lonely she was living by herself and how much company the old cat would be for her when I was downtown and sometimes when I have to go away on business. I jumped right on to the scheme and swore it should be done at once. Doll doesn't like to be hurried into anything, and this and my being for it together have put her right on to the other side. I tell you I'm a jim dandy of a married man. These fellows who are loaded down with their wife's relations don't know how to keep 'em off. They must begin at home. It's like one of those valves that the more you blow their way the more they shut up."

When my wife came home, the first time we had a disagreement I put in practice Harry's principle. But it didn't work. When I jumped on to her side of the question she jumped on to mine.

A Hard Shot.

Dining as honored guest with the governors of various states was "Private" John Allen of Mississippi, whose very whimsical way of saying things makes people smile. He told himself what happened when he was once called on to speak. "I got up and said," explained "Private" Allen, "that I came with the understanding that I was not to speak during this trip. Then some one cried from the other end of the room, 'Yes, and I came with the same understanding.'"

PREPARING FOR CONSERVATION MEETING

Red Lake County Will Have Exhibit at the Big St. Paul Meeting.

County Commissioners Appropriated Fifty Dollars to Defray Expenses.

Preparations are being made for Red Lake county's exhibit at the big conservation congress to be held in St. Paul this month. Owing to the limit of amount of space allowed each county the exhibit will necessarily be small, but it will be good.

Each county will have a table 30x36 inches and [illegible] wall space behind the table of the same size. On the table will be displayed in glass jars small quantities of all kinds of grains grown in the county. There will also be exhibits of vegetables and grasses and on the wall will be photographs and other decorations.

Everyone is being urged to bring in small quantities of any grain or product that might add to the value of the exhibit. Anyone having good [illegible] or others can help by [illegible] them in the exhibit.

A [illegible] will be hung on the wall [illegible] and from each [illegible] the map a ribbon [illegible] county's booth. It [illegible] advertisement for Red Lake county if there is a good show at [illegible].

The county commissioners last week appropriated fifty dollars to help pay the expenses of sending the exhibit. Any contribution to the exhibit may be left with [illegible] the land men who will see that it is properly handled.

Women as Delegates.

Because some women called the attention of Governor Eberhart to the fact that women of Minnesota were the first to start the conservation movement, the governor has named more than two hundred women as delegates to the coming conservation and development congress to be held in St. Paul March 16 to 19.

Mrs. C. G. Higbee, president of the State Federation of Womens' Clubs, was the one woman who knew "women were first." The incident dates back to the movement to set aside the tract about Cass Lake as a public park. This reserve was undoubtedly secured by the women and hence they made, according to prominent members of the woman's clubs, the first move for conservation in Minnesota. The governor took notice at once and a large number who attend the meetings in St. Paul will be women.

DEATH OF A PIONEER

H. B. Kaufer, Pioneer Citizen and First Village President, Passed Away Tuesday.

Tuesday morning of this week, at 6:30 at his home in this city, H. B. Kaufer passed out of this life very peacefully at the ripe old age of eighty-nine years, five months and eleven days from the weaknesses of old age aggravated by a slight case of erysipelas after a brief illness of eight days.

Mr. Kaufer was born at Worth-on-the-Main, near Frankfort, Bavaria, Germany on Sept. 19, 1820. He came to America May 1, 1852, on one of the fastest ships of that period which took three months to cross the Atlantic. He was married at Louisville, Kentucky, to Monica Litteret, who preceded him in death seven years, having died in this city in 1902. Mr. Kaufer and wife were of the early pioneers of Minnesota, having come to this state and settling at Mankato in 1859, where he engaged in the manufacture of pottery, he having established the first industry of the kind in Minnesota. They resided at Mankato until 1880 when they moved to Fergus Falls, staying there but two years when Mr. Kaufer and his family came to this city in 1882, having resided here ever since. Mr. Kaufer was one of the early settlers here and he was president of the first village council of Red Lake Falls. Of that first village council over which Mr. Kaufer presided only one member, Dr. L. Lemieux, is now living. Mr. Kaufer was known as a hard worker and in his younger days took an active interest in the welfare and upbuilding of Red Lake Falls. He was a man of great strength of character and was greatly respected by all who knew him. He was the father of six children all of whom survive him, namely, Henry J. Kaufer of Calgary, Emma K. Krast of Hammond, Indiana, Phil A. Kaufer of Tacoma, Wash., Mrs. Adam Zeh, Tillie Kaufer and L. A. Kaufer of Red Lake Falls, all of whom will be here for the funeral which will take place from St. Joseph's Catholic church this city at 10:30 o'clock Saturday morning.

WILL OPEN STORE HERE

New Furniture Store to be Opened in Kaus Block About March 15.

Arthur Fournet, of the Fournet Furniture company at Crookston, has made arrangements to open a store in Red Lake Falls. He has leased the Kaus block and he will have a large stock of furniture shipped here at once. The store will be opened about March 15. The store will be under the management of J. F. Fournet who has been engaged in business at Harvey, N. D., but recently sold out there.

For Sale—23 cows and a Short Horn bull. I will not sell less than 20 as I wish to go out of the [illegible] business. They are excellent Short Horn and none over six years old. Anyone wishing to buy the lot will have the right to see them milked morning and evening and have the milk tested.—Swan Aveuson.

GOVERNOR DOES NOT SATISFY DELEGATES

Governor Eberhart Addressed County Option Convention Yesterday.

Convention Not Enthusiastic Over What the Governor Had to Say.

Twenty-five hundred county option delegates met in convention at the auditorium in St. Paul yesterday.

Governor Eberhart addressed the convention, but his address did not satisfy the county option people. The governor in his address told the delegates he would take no part in the controversy growing out of the county option agitation until his party, in convention assembled, has decided what position towards the question shall be. He assured the delegates, however, that if a county option bill should be presented to him as governor he will sign it and enforce it.

However the delegates will stand for no one who is not a county option advocate and Governor Eberhart as a candidate for governor is not acceptable to the county option people.

C. L. Quist, editor of the Thief River Press, was secretary of the convention.

For Rent.

Cash rent to highest bidder, S. half of sec 33, Red Lake Falls township. 70 acres under cultivation, balance hay land. Sealed bids will be received until March 10, 1910. Address E. McCreery, Care Gazette, Red Lake Falls, Minn. M3

THREE DITCHES ESTABLISHED; ONE PETITION IS REJECTED

Network of Ditches Established in Star and Highlanding Townships.

Result of Stormy Meeting of the County Commissioners Held Last Week.

As a result of the stormy meeting of the board of county commissioners held last week, three of the four county ditches petitioned for were established. When the work of the construction is completed there will be a big network of ditches in the towns of Star and Highlanding. The ditches established are No. 38, known as the Toreson ditch, No. 39, the Nesta ditch, No. 41, the Swanson ditch. The commissioners rejected the petition for the establishment of ditch No. 40, the Lattimore ditch. Ditches No. 39 and 41 were established just as petitioned for and there was only one change in No. 38. That ditch instead of crossing S½ of 19-153-39 will run along the east and south lines.

Of course everyone is not fully satisfied with what the commissioners have done: that could scarcely be expected. But considering the great difference of opinion regarding the courses the ditches should take and disputes as to the assessments, it is believed that the matter was disposed of very satisfactorily. There were several petitions but the completed work will make one system of ditches.

Petitions for ditches No. 11, 15 and 16 are now before the county board and engineers and viewers have been appointed to go over the proposed routes of these proposed ditches. These ditches, if established, will drain land in the towns of North, Silverton, Kratka and Clover Leaf.

Mrs. Sam S. Haislet of Lankin, N. D., who was the guest of friends in Red Lake Falls, returned to her home Tuesday. During Mrs. Haislet's stay here a number of social affairs were given in her honor. On Friday evening Mrs. J. C. Wilkinson entertained, the guests being a number of those who were Mrs. Haislet's intimate friends during the time of her residence in Red Lake Falls. It was a ladies' party, but by the exercise of masculine intuition the husbands of the guests arrived on the scene just at the time refreshments were being served. On Saturday evening Mrs. F. A. Grady entertained for Mrs. Haislet.

Misses Twinam and Marshall of the high school faculty went to Thief River Falls yesterday to visit the schools of that city.

Will Build "Court" House.

In the spring a young man's mind turns to the light of—orange blossoms and other trimmings. Editor Quist got himself interviewed by a Crookston Times reporter last week and he said that there's going to be a new court house in Thief River Falls next August. Certainly it can't be a house for storing county papers and housing county officials for that would be playing 'way ahead of the game. Is it possible that Brother Quist got his dates mixed or that his thoughts about court houses and other happier thoughts got all tangled up? June is a better month for weddings.

SOME VITAL STATISTICS

Fewer Marriages and Divorces in Red Lake County in 1909 Than in 1908.

Clerk of Court C. W. Johnson has prepared his report of the births and deaths and the marriages and divorces in Red Lake county for the year 1909. There were 307 births and 157 deaths. The previous year there were 285 births and 124 deaths. The account just about balances: a few more have come and a few more have gone than the year previous.

But there were fewer marriages and divorces during the year 1909 than the year previous. There were 82 weddings and 6 divorces last year and 93 weddings and 13 divorces the year before. The young fellows can give the "high cost of living" about which there is so much discussion as an "excuse" for the decrease in the number of weddings, but that would hardly account for the decrease in the number of divorces unless it is true that two can live cheaper than one.

Minnesota Grows Everything.

Samples of grain from every county in the state have been collected by George Welsh, state immigration commissioner, and these are all to be shown with state exhibit at the Conservation and Agricultural Development Congress to be held in St. Paul March 16 to 19. It will be interesting to notice the difference between the types of grains, but the collection from eighty-five counties will also be a demonstration that Minnesota grows everything.

SCHOOL ENTERTAINMENT

Grade Pupils of Public Schools Will Entertain Public.

The grade pupils of the public schools are preparing an entertainment to be given Friday evening, April 1. The little girls of the first four grades will give "Little Red Riding Hood," a musical play, and the boys of the same grade will give a ghost drill. The other grades will give Mrs. Jolly's Wax Figures. It has been many years since Mrs. Jolly and her wax figures have appeared in Red Lake Falls. The older people will welcome their return and the younger people will enjoy them for the first time.

INFORMATION ABOUT FEDERAL CENSUS

No One Should Hesitate About Answering Enumerator's Questions.

Washington, D. C. March 2, 1910. Letters from the census supervisors to the United States Census Bureau show the strong apprehension of a considerable element of the population that their answers to the enumerator's questions in the next census, beginning April 15, this year will cause increased taxation, or [illegible] entanglements, or injurious consequences to their persons or property.

In order to quiet such unfounded fears which would, unless removed, materially affect the accuracy of the census, the bureau has prepared an official statement relative to the decennial census, its [illegible] purpose, and uses.

This statement should furnish complete assurance to those concerned that information given the enumerators is held by the census bureau in the strictest confidence with reference to the identity of the informants, as required by the policy of the Bureau and commanded by the law of the United States.

The bureau earnestly hopes that clergymen, editors, physicians, school teachers, employers, and other public spirited citizens who come in contact with large numbers of people, will cooperate with the Bureau by telling persons who are inclined to entertain erroneous opinions the real facts and urging them to give full replies to the enumerators. Teachers are particularly requested to speak of the census to the school children and ask them to tell their parents about it.

The statement issued by the bureau explains that the Constitution requires a census of the population to be taken every ten years in order to apportion [illegible] the National House of Representatives [illegible] the means also to ascertain the increase in the population, [illegible] industries and resources of the nation since the last census.

It is emphatically declared by the statement that the information sought from the people of the United States is used solely for general statistical purposes. It will neither be published nor used in any other way to disclose facts regarding any individual or enterprise. The census [illegible] goes on to say, is not, never has been, and cannot be employed to obtain information that can be used in any way in the assessment of property for purpose of taxation or the collection of taxes, either national, state or local; or for deportation proceedings, extradition measures, army or navy conscription, internal revenue investigation, compulsory school attendance, child labor law prosecutions, quarantine regulations or in any way to affect the life, liberty or property of any person.

It points out that the [illegible] enumerators are and must be held by the Census Bureau in strict and absolute confidence. All the bureau officials, supervisors, clerks, enumerators, and interpreters before entering upon their duties are obliged to take a solemn oath not to disclose any information they may obtain except to the census bureau and a violation of the United States law in regard to this oath means a heavy fine or imprisonment for two years or both in the discretion of the court.

Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Duffy have been at Crookston several days this week and last week, having gone there that their little daughter, Clarice, might receive surgical treatment for appendicitis. An operation was performed at St. Vincent's hospital Monday by Dr. W. H. Smith. The operation was successful and the little patient is getting along nicely. Mrs. Duffy will remain with her daughter until she is strong enough to be brought home.

BIG DITCH CONTRACT GOES TO A. M. ARPIN

Thief River Man Gets Contract for Biggest Ditch Job in the State.

By Terms of Contract Work is to be Completed in Three Years.

The final hearing on the Mud Lake drainage project was held at Warren before Judge Grindeland last Saturday. There was very little opposition and the drainage system was ordered established.

Yesterday Judge Grindeland awarded the contract for doing the work to the Northwestern Drainage company of which A. M. Arpin of Thief River Falls is the manager. Mr. Arpin also made the offer to purchase the entire issue of the bonds for the work at par, the bonds to bear interest at 5 per cent. This was done for the reason that there had been some question as to the necessary funds being available in the state school fund to be invested in such bonds.

This is the greatest ditching project ever undertaken in the state. It will make roads and ditches more than 500 miles in length. It is said that every quarter section of land in eastern Marshall county will be benefitted by the construction of the ditch. Much of this land is low and flat and of little value at present. It is believed that it will be fine farming land when the ditch work is completed.

By the terms of the contract Mr. Arpin agrees to have the ditch completed in three years.

WORK IS SUSPENDED.

On the New Soo Line, Duluth to Plummer.

One thousand men who have been employed on the new Soo line being built from Duluth to Plummer, have been laid off temporarily. Owing to the very cold weather in January the ground became frozen so deeply that the work of grading could not be carried on advantageously. Work will be resumed as soon as the frost is out of the ground in the spring.

ABOUT BOND ISSUE

Unsuccessful Bidder Congratulates People on Big Price Bonds Sold For.

The papers at Thief River Falls have severely criticised the county commissioners for selling the court house bonds to the highest bidder in open competition. In that connection the following letter from unsuccessful bidders will be of interest to the people of the county:

Chicago, Feb. 23, 1910.

Mr. A. A. Latendresse,
County Auditor, Red Lake County,
Red Lake Falls, Minn.

Dear Sir:—

We are in receipt of your favor of the 19th inst., enclosing list of the bids and bidders at the sale of your County Court House bonds to the amount of $37,000, for which please accept our thanks.

We wish to congratulate you on the high prices at which you succeeded in selling the bonds and trust we will be more successful at your next sale.

E. H. ROLLINS & SONS.

The bonds, to bear 5 per cent interest, were sold at a premium of $1800.00. The bid of E. H. Rollins & Sons was the same rate of interest and premium of $114.00.

PREPARING FOR COUNTY'S DISPLAY AT HAMLINE FAIR

People of County Will be Asked to Get Busy on the Undertaking.

Meeting of Delegates From All Over the County Will be Called.

At the monthly meeting of the Riverside Club held Tuesday evening the question of an exhibit for Red Lake county at the state fair came up for discussion and it was the consensus of opinion that the people of the county ought to get busy at once.

Last year the county commissioners appropriated $300 to defray the expenses of making an exhibit, but it was so late in the season that a creditable exhibit could not be prepared.

This year it is decided that an early start shall be made and preliminary steps were taken to secure a county organization to make a campaign for a good exhibit. A committee was appointed to make arrangements for a county meeting. A call will be issued for delegates from each of the towns, villages and cities of the county to attend a meeting at which a county organization will be perfected.

The meeting is to be set for an early date so that the work of preparing for the exhibit may be commenced before seeding. The purpose of the organization is to arouse interest in the undertaking. Farmers will be urged to prepare and plant seed of known high quality on specially prepared ground that the best possible results may be obtained when the crops are harvested. Any farmer who has grains or other products of especially high quality with soil adapted to their growth should make an effort to get a record production of that grain or other products. Much can be accomplished by making a united effort before seeding.

The members of the committee are P. B. Gaass, S. M. Sivertson, Supt. H. F. Anderson, V. M. Higinbotham, Samuel Gibeau. These men will set a date for a county meeting and will issue a call for delegates to attend that meeting and perfect a county organization. There is no doubt that the commissioners will be ready to make as liberal an appropriation as they did last year, especially if the people of the county make a united effort to prepare a creditable exhibit.

Red Lake county needs just the kind of advertising that a good exhibit at the state fair will give it and everybody should get busy.

Watch Mittwer's show windows. They are always pleasing to the eye and show the latest and best to be had in their line.

Agricultural Education.

The McIntosh high school has just closed a farmers' short course of a period of six days, during which time nearly every subject in connection with the successful operation of a farm was discussed by members of the Farmers' Institute staff and those connected with the division of agricultural extention at the Minnesota Department of Agriculture. Morning, afternoon and evening sessions were held. The attendance was large. Prizes for wheat were offered as follows: $3.00, $2.00, $1.00; for oats the same amounts; for barley the same; potatoes, the same, one peck of each. Entries were limited to those who were enrolled. An enrollment fee of $1.00 was charged.

Of the certificates granted to applicants in Red Lake county all but nine are renewals—certificates granted to those who had certificates and wrote to get better marks. BETTER MAKE IT "30"

Another Postponement of Investigation of Charges Against Officials.

The investigation of the charges of malfeasance in office brought against Auditor A. A. Latendresse and Chairman C. A. Lindquist of the county board has been postponed again. Feb. 15 was the date originally set for the investigation. Before that date there was a postponement to Feb. 23 and later to March 1 and to March 3 and now comes the information that there won't be anything doing until March 23. Why not make it "30?"

Had a Narrow Escape.

Arpin's "Muskeg Limited," on its return from the Grygla country last Friday and while "putting up" for the night at Germantown, came near being the scene of disaster which would have caused the death of the inmates, due to escaping coal gas, if it had not been discovered in the nick of time. The men, as usual, betook themselves to their respective "bunks" about eleven o'clock and were fast asleep, when, about an hour afterwards, one of the men awoke, apparently from a severe headache, and arose to find the room filled with the deadly fumes and finding his strength fast giving away quickly opened a window and gave an alarm and fell to the floor unconscious; the others hearing the alarm arose only to find their strength also failing and were soon overcome, and it was not until about three hours later that they regained consciousness. They state that they are not over-anxious to encounter a similar experience again.—Thief River News.

MINNESOTA WINS

UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT FILES DECISIONS IN GROSS EARNINGS CASES.

HARLAN READS DECISION

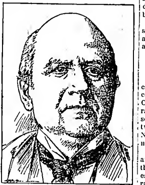
$800,000 To Be Paid Into State Treasury—Great Northern and Great Western Are Railroads Which Must Settle Deficit.

Washington, D. C. — The state of Minnesota won a complete victory over the Great Northern and Great Western Railway companies when the supreme court of the United States affirmed the decision of the state court holding that the railroads were liable to a 4 per cent gross earnings tax.

As a result of decisions by the United States supreme court in the 4 per cent gross earnings tax cases, the treasury of the state of Minnesota will be immediately enriched $800,000 and approximately $200,000 will be added to the state's income each year. Judgments for more than $800,000 in back taxes will be immediately entered against the Great Northern and Great Western railroads. The judgments are the largest ever obtained by the state.

The decision was announced by Justice Harmon, who discussed the questions at issue very briefly. He sketched the creation of the Western Pacific road, which subsequently became a part of the Great Northern system, the legislatation under which the road was taxed and the claim of the Great Northern that this legislation constituted a contract with the state, under which the rate of taxation could not be increased as provided in the 4 per cent law.

The Great Northern and Great Western tax cases arose out of the 4 per cent gross earnings law of 1903. Prior to the passage of that law all Minnesota railroads had paid 3 per cent of their gross earnings in the state, as taxes, and in lieu of all other taxes and assessments. The Great Western on its main line from St. Paul to the Iowa line had paid only 2 per cent, claiming that its territorial charter exempted it from paying a higher rate on that line.



JOHN M. HARLAN.
Associate Justice U. S. Supreme Court.

This and a similar Great Northern charter were used as arguments against the 4 per cent bill, which was fathered session after session by J. F. Jacobson, and finally passed by the legislature in 1901. But the constitution required that it be ratified by a majority of all the votes at the next election. In 1902 it failed of that majority, but the 1093 legislature passed it again, and in the 1904 election it was ratified, taking effect on the 1905 taxes.

When these taxes became due in the spring of 1906, the Great Northern Railway company paid the 3 per cent on the line covered by the old Minnesota & Pacific charter of 1857, and refused to pay the balance, which was $120,737.38. The old charter was claimed to be an irrevocable contract binding the state.

A similar position was taken by the Great Western. The Minnesota & Northwestern charter of 1856 had limited taxes on that line to 2 per cent, and the modern company claimed the rights of a successor. It refused to pay the additional $24,979.62 claimed by the state for 1905.

The state brought suit against both companies for the balance due and the legal penalties. The district court of Ramsey county decided for the defense, but the state supreme corut, Justice Calvin L. Brown, writing the opinion, reversed the decision. The supreme court held that the companies did not have any contract right to the lower tax rate, but that the state had the right to levy any reasonable rate of tax on their systems. From this the defendants went to the United States supreme court on a writ of error.

HOUSE BURNS, LIFE IS LOST.

Girl Perishes in Cohasset—Man May May Die From Injuries.

Duluth, Feb. 25.—A terrible tragedy occurred at Cohasset, Minn., when Elnora, the 14-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Coombs, was burned to death in her bed and her uncle, Delaney Duss, was so badly burned that little hope for his recovery is entertained.

Mr. and Mrs. Coombs barely escaped with their lives, and saved their baby by throwing it out of the window of their home into the snow, before they climbed through.

Mr. Coombs got up at 4 a. m. to start a fire, and then went back to bed, and to sleep. When he awoke, half an hour later, the house was in flames.

Worm Turns at Last

It was the old story. The one we have all seen repeated so many, many times. Two young women entered the car together and the tired-looking man arose and proffered his seat. Then, while he groped unsteadily for a strap, the usual conversation ensued:

"Oh, thank you, sir."

"Thank you so much."

"Sit down, dear."

"No, you sit down."

"I insist, dear; I'm not a bit tired."

"Neither am I, and I'd just as soon stand."

"Go ahead, dear, and take it."

"No, no, you take it. I—"

And then the tired man did what so many have wanted to see done so many, many times. He took it himself.

As he sank wearily but calmly back in his seat the smiles of mutual benev-

SHOOT STRIKERS

STATE TROOPS HAVE SERIOUS SKIRMISH WITH MOB AT BETHLEHEM.

MANY ARRESTS ARE MADE

Striking Steel Workers at South Bethlehem Resort to Violence—Troops Hurried From Philadelphia.

South Bethlehem, Pa., Feb. 26.—The state police summoned from Philadelphia to the great plant of the Bethlehem Steel Co., 7,000 of whose employes are on a strike, had not been here half an hour before the force had a skirmish with a mob of 200 foreigners. The latter, who appeared to be bent on mischief, were scared. Several of the disturbers were struck by policemen's riot sticks. A number of arrests were made.

The violence, which was brought out among foreigners at the works yesterday, caused the Northampton county authorities to see further trouble ahead, and it was decided to prevent, if possible, any serious rioting. The governor was communicated with, and during the night Capt. John C. Groome of the state police was instructed to send men to Bethlehem at once.

Accordingly thirty of the policemen with their mounts, left at 5 a. m. from Philadelphia, where they were doing strike duty. They arrived shortly before 7 o'clock.

The entire plant of the Bethlehem company, which employs about 9,000 men, were shut down today until Monday. It is expected to resume then under protection of the state police.

The strike at the steel works started Feb. 4, when several hundred machinists quit because they were refused time and half for extra work. The trouble spread to the various departments of the plants, crippling the company to some extent, but the strikers were not organized and several breaks occurred, hundreds of men returning to work.

The strike again began to grow this week when the strikers became more active in picketing. The violence yesterday was due to pickets interfering with men on their way to and from the works.

Two foreigners were shot by the state police during a fight at the Majestic hotel this morning. One was shot in the head and is in a serious condition at the hospital. The other received a slight wound in the leg.

ACCUSED OF DISLOYALTY.

Pinchot Says Ballinger Has Been False to President.

Washington, Feb. 26.—With Gifford Pinchot on the witness stand the Ballinger inquiry entered its second phase today. The dismissed chief of the forest service, before being sworn, dramatically declared that when his story had been told, the country would be in sympathy with him.

L. R. Glavis, the Cunningham claims and Barney Bradles, all stood aside to make room for Mr. Pinchot, for Attorney George W. Pepper, his personal counsel and the story of Secretary Ballinger's dealings with the water power site and of the public domain.

Pinchot accused Ballinger of having made an explanation of his conduct to the president that was "Essentially false." He charged him with being a "dangerous enemy of conservation." He charged him with having made a statement shown by undisputed documentary evidence, " to be absolutely false in three essential particulars." He charged him with having "wilfully deceived the president" and of being disloyal to the president.

His recital had not progress very far, however, when there came an objection from Ballinger's attorney as to the witness repeating conservations had with President Taft. It was contended that the relation of these conversations would put the president in an attitude where he would either have to remain silent or else appear before the committee as a witness, which, it was declared, would be undesirable. The question was argued for some time and during the course of his statements of the matter Pinchot admitted that President Taft, in a letter writen subsequent to the conservation, had declared that his recollection of what transpired at the interview differed in some particulars from that of Pinchot.

Ottawa, Ont., Feb. 26—The secretary of state announced in the house of commons yesterday that his majesty King Edward, had bestowed on Conductor Thomas Reynolds, hero of the Spanish river wreck on the Canadian Pacific railroad's main line from Sudbury to Saul' Ste Marie, three weeks ago, the highest recognition of heroism, outside military valor, in the gift of a British sovereign.

Reynolds, at the risk of his own life, and by almost superhuman endeavor, saved the lives of nine others who had been imprisoned with him in the submerger dinning car.

Wife Held for Murder.

Kirksville, Mo., Feb. 26.—The arrest of Mrs. Vaughn today, on a charge of murdering her husband, marks another step in what promises to be one of the most sensational as well as one of the hardest fought murder cases in the history of the state.

Dr. J. R. Hull of Monroe City, the Proctor family physician, was arrested Thursday on a like charge and is now out on ball.

A Pause in Devotions.

"Mabel," called her father, outside her bedroom door. There was no answer, so he called again. Still no reply. He pushed open the door, which was not completely shut, and reaching for the button, turned on the lights. Then he saw Mabel. She was kneeling at the side of her bed in her nightgown, in the attitude of prayer—the attitude, that is, as to kneeling. But she had raised her head at the interruption and paused in her devotions to blaze at him with a face flushed with impatience.

"Gee whiz, daddy! Can't a woman say her prayers?"

Then she bowed her head again, piously, and daddy, properly rebuked, slipped noiselessly away.

SYNOPSIS.

[illegible]

CHAPTER X.—Continued.

He had been on deck a long time that day, but Baraka had only been installed in her chair a few minutes. As yet he had hardly talked to her of anything but the necessary preparations for the journey, and she had trusted him entirely, being so worn out with fatigue and bodily discomfort that she was already half asleep when he had at last brought her aboard, late on the previous night. Before the yacht had sailed he had received Van Torp's telegram informing him that Kralinsky was at Bayreuth; for his secretary had sat up till two in the morning to telegraph him the latest news and forward any message that came, and Van Torp's had been among the number.

"I have something of importance to tell you," Logotheti said.

Baraka prepared herself against betraying surprise by letting her lids droop a little, but that was all.

"Speak," she answered. "I desire knowledge more than gold."

"You are wise," said the Greek gravely. "No doubt you remember the rich man Van Torp, for whom I gave you a letter, and whom you had seen on the day you were arrested."

"Van Torp." Baraka pronounced the name distinctly, and nodded. "Yes, I remember him well. He knows where the man is whom I seek, and he wrote the address for me. I have it. You will take me there in your ship, and I shall find him."

"If you find him, what shall you say to him?" Logotheti asked.

"Few words. These perhaps: 'You left me to die, but I am not dead, I am here. Through me you are a rich, great man. The rubies are my marriage portion, which you have taken. Now you must be my husband.' That is all. Few words."

"It is your right," Logotheti answered. "But he will not marry you."

"Then he shall die," replied Baraka, as quietly as if she were saying that he should go for a walk.

"If you kill him, the laws of that country may take your life," objected the Greek.

"That will be my portion," the girl answered, with profound indifference.

"You only have one life," Logotheti observed. "It is yours to throw away. But the man you seek is not in that country. Van Torp has telegraphed me that he is much nearer. Nevertheless, if you mean to kill him, I will not take you to him, as I intended to do."

Baraka's face had changed, though she had been determined not to betray surprise at anything he said; she turned to him, and fixed her eyes on his, and he saw her lashes quiver.

"You will tell me where he is," she said anxiously. "If you will not take me I will go alone with Spiro. I have been in many countries with no other help. I can go there also, where he is. You will tell me."

"Not if you mean to murder him," said Logotheti, and she saw that he was in earnest.

"But if he will not be my husband, what can I do, if I do not k'll him?" She asked the question in evident good faith.

"If I were you, I should make him share the rubies and the money with you, and then I would leave him to himself."

"But you do not understand," Baraka protested. "He is young, he is beautiful, he is rich. He will take some other woman for his wife, if I leave him. You see, he must die, there is no other way. If he will not marry me, it is his portion. Why do you talk? Have I not come across the world from the Altai, by Samarkand and Tiflis, as far as England, to find him and marry him? Is it nothing that I have done, a Tartar girl alone, with no friend but a bag of precious stones that any strong thief might have taken from me? Is the danger nothing? The travel nothing? Is it nothing that I have gone about like a shameless one, with my face uncovered, dressed in a man's clothes? That I have cut my hair, my beautiful black hair, is that as nothing, too? That I have been in an English prison? That I have been called a thief? I have suffered all these things to find him, and if I come to him at last, and he will not be my husband, shall he live and take another woman? You are a great man, it is true. But you do not understand. You are only a Frank, after all! That little maid you have brought for me would understand me better, though she has been taught for six years by Christians. She is a good girl. She says that in all that time she has never once forgotten to say the Fatiheh three times a day, and to say 'el hamdu lillah' to herself after she has eaten! She would understand. I know she would. But you, never!"

The exquisite little aquiline features wore a look of unutterable contempt.

"If I were you," said Logotheti, smiling, "I would not tell her what you are going to do."

"You see!" cried Baraka, almost angrily. "You do not understand. A servant! Shall I tell my heart to my handmaid, and my secret thoughts to a hired man? I tell you, because you are a friend, though you have no understanding of me. My father feeds many flocks, and has many bondmen and bondwomen, whom he beats when it pleases him, and can put to death if he likes. He also knows the mine of rubies, as his father did before him, and when he desires gold he takes one to Tashkent, or even to Samarkand, a long journey, and sells it to the Russians. He is a great man. If he would bring a camel bag full of precious stones to Europe he could be one of the greatest men in the world. And you think that my father's daughter would open her heart to one of her servants? I said well that you do not understand!"

Logotheti looked quietly at the slim young thing in a ready-made blue serge frock, who said such things as a Lady Clara Vere de Vere would scarcely dare to say above her breath in these democratic days; and he watched the noble little features, and the small white hands, that had come down to her through generations of chieftains, since the days when the primeval shepherds of the world counted the stars in the plains of Kaf.

He himself, with his long Greek descent, was an aristocrat to the marrow, and smiled at the claims of men who traced their families back to the Crusaders. With the help of a legend or two and half a myth, he could almost make himself a far descendant of the Tyndaridae. But what was that compared with the pedigree of the little thing in a blue serge frock? Her race went back to a time before Hesiod, before Homer, to a date that might be found in the annals of Egypt, but nowhere else in all the dim traditions of human history.

"No," he said, after a long pause. "I begin to understand. You had not told me that your father was a great man, and that his sires before him had joined hand to hand, from the hand of Adam himself."

This polite speech, delivered in his best Tartar, though with sundry Turkish terminations and accents, somewhat mollified Baraka, and she pushed her little head backwards and upwards against the top of the deck chair, as if she was drawing herself up with pride. Also, not being used to European skirts, she stuck out one tiny foot a little further across the other, as she stretched herself, and she indiscreetly showed a pale-yellow silk ankle, round which she could have easily made her thumb meet her second finger. Logotheti glanced at it.

"You will never understand," she said, but her tone had relented, and she made a concession. "If you will take me to him, and if he will not be my husband, I will let Spiro kill him."

"That might be better," Logotheti answered with extreme gravity, for he was quite sure that Spiro would never kill anybody. "If you will take an oath which I shall dictate, and swear to let Spiro do it, I will take you to the man you seek."

"What must be, must be," Baraka said in a tone of resignation. "When he is dead, Spiro can also kill me and take the rubies and the money."

"That would be a pity," observed the Greek, thoughtfully.

"Why a pity? It will be my portion. I will not kill myself because then I should go to hell-fire, but Spiro can do it very well. Why should I still live, then?"

"Because you are young and beautiful and rich enough to be very happy. Do you never look at your face in the mirror? The eyes of Baraka are like the pools of paradise, when the moon rose upon them the first time, her waist is as slender as a young willow sapling that bends to the breath of a spring breeze, her mouth is a dark rose from Gulistan—"

But Baraka interrupted him with a faint smile.

"You speak emptiness," she said quietly. "What is the oath, that I may swear it? Shall I take Allah, and the prophet, and the Angel Israfil to witness that I will keep my word? Shall I prick my hand and let the drops fall into your two hands that you may drink them? What shall I do and say? I am ready."

"You must swear an oath that my fathers swore before there were Christians or Mussulmen in the world when the old gods were still great."

"Speak. I will repeat any words you like. Is it a very solemn oath?"

"It is the most solemn that ever was sworn, for it is the oath of the gods themselves. I shall give it to you slowly, and you must try to pronounce it right, word by word, holding out your hands, like this, with the palms downwards."

"I am ready," said Baraka, doing as he bade her.

He quoted in Greek the oath that Hypnos dictates to Hera in the "Iliad," and Baraka repeated each word, pronouncing as well as she could.

"I swear by the inviolable water of the Styx, and I lay one hand upon the all-nourishing earth, the other on the sparkling sea, that all the gods below may be our witnesses, even they that stand round about Kronos. Thus I swear!"

As he had anticipated, Baraka was much more impressed by the importance of the words she did not understand than if she had bound herself by any oath familiar to her.

"I am sorry," she said, "but what is done is done, and you would have it so."

She pressed her hand gently to her left side and felt the long steel bodkin, and sighed regretfully.

"You have sworn an oath that no man would dare to break," said Logotheti solemnly. "A man would rather kill pigs on the graves of his father and his mother than break it."

"I shall keep my word. Only take me quickly where I would be."

Logotheti produced a whistle from his pocket and blew on it, and a quartermaster answered the call, and was sent for the captain, who came in a few moments.

"Head her about for Jersey and Carterets, captain," said the owner. "The sea is as flat as a board, and we will land there. You can go on to the Mediterranean without coaling, can you not?"

The captain said he could coal at Gibraltar, if necessary.

"Then take her to Naples, please, and wait for instructions."

Baraka understood nothing, but within two minutes she saw that the yacht was changing her course, for the afternoon sun was all at once pouring in on the deck, just beyond the end of her chair. She was satisfied, and nodded her approval.

"When shall we reach that place?" she asked lazily, and she turned her face to Logotheti.

"Allah knows," he answered gravely.

She had been so well used to hearing that answer to all sorts of questions since she had been a child that she thought nothing of it, and waited awhile before speaking again. Her eyes studied the man's face almost unconsciously. He now wore a fez instead of a yachting cap, and it changed his expression. He no longer looked in the least like a European. The handsome red felt glowed like blood in the evening light, and the long black silk tassel hung backwards with a dashing air. There was something about him that reminded Baraka of Saad, and Saad had been a handsome man, even in her eyes, until the traveler had come to her father's house with his blue eyes and golden beard. But Saad had only seen her unveiled face once, and that was the last thing he saw when the ball from the Mauser went through his forehead.

"I mean," she asked after some time, "shall we be there to-morrow? or the next day? I see no land on this side; is there any on the other?"

"No," Logotheti answered, "there is no land near. Perhaps, far off, we might see a small island."

"Is that the place?" Baraka began to be interested at last.

"The place is far away. You must have patience. All hurry comes from Satan."

"I am not impatient," the girl answered mildly. "I am glad to rest in your ship, for I was very tired, more tired than I ever was when I was a child, and used to climb up the foothills to see Altai better. It is good to be in your ship for a while, and after that, what shall be, will be. It is Allah that knows."

"That is the truth," responded the Greek. "Allah knows. I said so just now. But I will tell you what I have decided, if you will listen."

"I listen."

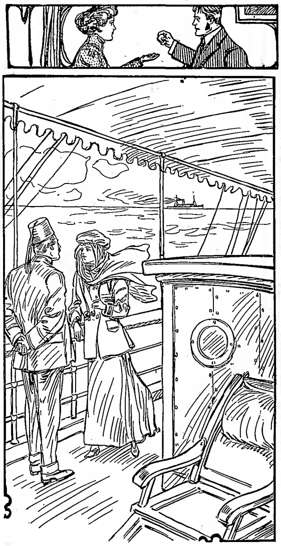
"It is better that you should rest several days after all your weariness, and the man you seek will not run away, for he does not know that you are so near."

"But he may take another woman," Baraka objected, growing earnest at once. "Perhaps he has already! Then there will be two instead of one."

"Spiro," said Logotheti, with perfect truth, "would as soon kill two as one, I am sure, for he is a good servant. It will be the same to him. You call me a great man and a king; I am not a king, for I have no kingdom, though some kingdoms would like to have as much ready money as I. But here, on the ship, I am the master, not only because it is mine, and because I choose to command, but because the men are bound by English law to obey me; and if they should refuse and overpower me, and take my ship where I did not wish to go, the laws of all nations would give me the right to put them all into prison at once, for a long time. Therefore when I say, 'Go to a certain place,' they take the ship there, according to their knowledge, for they are trained to that business and can guide the vessel towards any place in the world, though they cannot see land till they reach it. Do you understand all these things?"

"I understand," Baraka answered, smiling. "But I am not bound to obey you, and at least I can beg you to do what I ask, and I think you will do it."

Her voice grew suddenly soft, and almost tender, for though she was only a Tartar girl, and very young and slim, she was a woman. Eve had not had long experience of talking when she explained to Adam the properties of apples.



"You Are Wise as Well as Great," Baraka Said.

Logotheti answered her smile and her tone.

"I shall do what you ask me, but I shall do it slowly rather than quickly, because that will be better for you in the end. If we had gone on as we were going, we should have got to land to-night, but to a wretched little town from which we should have had to take a night train, hot and dirty and dusty, all the way to Paris. That would not help you to rest, would it?"

"Oh, no! I wish to sleep again in your ship, once, twice, till I cannot sleep any more. Then you will take me to the place."

"That is what you shall do. To that end I gave orders this afternoon."

"You are wise, as well as great," Baraka said.

They left the rail and walked slowly forward, side by side, without speaking; and Logotheti told himself how utterly happy he should be if Baraka could turn into Margaret and be walking with him there; yet something answered him that since she was not by his side he was not to be pitied for the company of a lovely Tartar girl whose language he could understand and even speak tolerably; and when the first voice observed rather drily that Margaret would surely think that he ought to feel very miserable, the second voice told him to take the goods the gods sent him and be grateful; and this little antiphone of Ormuzd and Ahriman went on for some time, till it occurred to him to stop the duo by explaining to Baraka how a European girl would probably slip her arm, or at least her hand, through the arm of the man with whom she was walking on the deck of a yacht, because there was generally a little motion at sea, and she would like to steady herself, and when there was none, there ought to be, and she would do the same thing by force of habit. But Baraka looked at such behavior quite differently.

"That would be a sort of dance," she said. "I am not a dancing girl! I have seen men and women dancing together, both Russians in Samarkand and other people in France. It is disgusting. I would rather go unveiled among my own people!"

"Which may Allah forbid!" answered Logotheti devoutly. "But where there are Englishmen, Allah does nothing; the women go without veils, and the boys and girls dance together."

"I have done worse," said Baraka, "for I have dressed as a man, and if a woman did that among my people she would be stoned to death and not buried. My people will never know what I have done since I got away from them alive. But he thought he was leaving me there to die!"

"Surely. I cannot see why you wish to marry a man who robbed you and tried to compass your death! I can understand that you should dream of killing him, and he deserves to be burnt alive, but why you should wish to marry him is known to the wisdom of the blessed ones!"

"You never saw him," Baraka answered with perfect simplicity. "He is a beautiful man; his beard is like the rays of the morning sun on a ripe cornfield. His eyes are bright as an eagle's, but blue as sapphires. He is much taller and bigger and stronger than you are. Do you not see why I want him for a husband? Why did he not desire me for his wife? Am I crooked, am I blinded by the smallpox, or have I six fingers on both hands and a hump on my shoulder like the Witch of Altai? Was my portion a cotton shift, one brass bangle and a horn comb for my hair? I gave him the riches of the world to take me, and he would not! I do not understand. Am I an evil sight in a man's eyes? Tell me the truth, for you are a friend!"

"You are good to see," Logotheti answered, stopping and pretending to examine her face critically as she stood and faced him.

"I do not desire you to speak for yourself," returned Baraka. "I wish you to speak for any man, since I go about unveiled and any man may see me. What would they say in the street if they saw me now, as a woman? That is what I must know, for he is a Frank, and he will judge me as the Franks judge when he sees me! What will he say?"

"Shall I speak as a Frank? Or as they speak in Constantinople?"

"Speak as he would speak, I pray. But speak the truth."

"I take Allah to witness that I speak the truth," Logotheti answered. "If I had never seen you, and if I were walking in the Great Garden in London and I met you by the bank of the river, I should say that you were the prettiest dark girl in England, but that I should like to see you in a beautiful Feringhi hat and the best frock that could be made in Paris."

Baraka's face was troubled, and she looked into his eyes anxiously.

"I understand," she said. "Before I meet him I must have more clothes, many beautiful new dresses. It was shameless, but it was easy to dress as a man, after I had learned, for it was always the same—the difference was three buttons—or four buttons, or a high hat or a little hat; not much. Also the Feringhi men button their garments as the Mussulmans do, the left over the right, but I often see their women's coats buttoned like a Hindu's. Why is this? Have the women another religion than the men? It is very strange!"

Logotheti laughed, for he had really never noticed the rather singular fact which had struck the born Asiatic at once.

The Judge and the Doctor

Man of Medicine, After Jurist's Explanation, Concluded to Let His Grievance Pass.

The physician was a witness in a damage case, and his answers to questions had been marked by more length than lucidity. The lawyer who was examining him several times cautioned him to confine his replies to subjects involved in the questions, but this warning had little effect. Finally the judge lost patience and told him to make an effort to shorten his answers and to quit talking when he got through.

This had some effect temporarily, but a few minutes later the physician began a long and rambling answer which had only a vague and remote bearing upon what had been asked him.

"Look here," said the now irate judge, "you are wasting the time of the court, the attorneys, the witnesses and everybody else here, and delaying the trial of the case. Now, if you don't confine yourself to plain answers hereafter I shall send you to jail for contempt of court!"

That had its effect, and the testimony of the witness was concluded in a reasonable time after that.

The next day the judge and the physician met upon the street. They are acquaintances, and stopped and shook hands.

"Say, Judge," inquired the doctor, "would it be contempt of court, now that you are no longer on the bench, to say that you acted like a damned fool at the trial yesterday, and would you send me to jail?"

"Oh, no," replied his honor easily. "I'd go to jail; you'd go to the hospital."

The physician didn't say what he had intended to say.
